

"Our greatest fear is that though we may come in different sizes, colors and shapes, we share so much more than our differences state. We cry, and we laugh. We're right, and we are wrong. We are so incredibly capable of the same successes and failures that our differences become hollow shells to which our fear gives most high importance."

Morning of Hope

By Jazzy Miller

Featuring poetry by Maya Angelou and excerpts from speeches by Martin Luther King Jr. and Stokely Carmichael

April 8, 6:00PM and April 9, 4:30PM in the McCoy Studio

Performers: Caroline Reid, Kelly White and Jazzy Miller