

- Caroline Hibbert:* Hello. My name is Caroline Hibbert.
- Kimberly Lemus:* I'm Kimberly Lemus.
- Caroline Hibbert:* On behalf of Crossroads to Freedom and the Center for Transforming Communities, we'd like to thank you for sharing your story with us today. Could you state your name?
- Patricia Allen:* It's Patricia. Most people know me by Patricia Allen and _____ Patsy, but it's really Pauline Patricia.
- Caroline Hibbert:* What year were you born?
- Patricia Allen:* '39.
- Caroline Hibbert:* Where were you born and raised?
- Patricia Allen:* Memphis.
- Caroline Hibbert:* Were you raised in the Holland Heights Community?
- Patricia Allen:* Yes, all but about three years during the war. I was with my parents down around the coast because my father was a welder in the shipyards.
- Caroline Hibbert:* What school did you go to?
- Patricia Allen:* Treadwell.
- Caroline Hibbert:* For how many years?
- [00:01:00]
- Patricia Allen:* Twelve. I didn't go to kindergarten. I'm not sure they had a kindergarten there.
- Caroline Hibbert:* What year did you graduate in?
- Patricia Allen:* 1957.
- Caroline Hibbert:* What was it like going to Treadwell for that amount of time?
- Patricia Allen:* Interesting. I always felt that I fit. Otherwise I didn't feel that I fit, but overall my memories are pleasant.
- Caroline Hibbert:* What kind of activities were you involved in?

Patricia Allen: _____ the scroll. I think speech and drama club, maybe the Spanish club.

Caroline Hibbert: What did you end up doing after graduation?

Patricia Allen: I went to Memphis State all four years.

Caroline Hibbert: What was your time there like? Were there a lot of fellow Treadwell alums there?

[00:02:00]

Patricia Allen: Some, but not a tremendous amount. It was a wider variety of people like that. People not like from Memphis schools, but out of state.

Caroline Hibbert: What was your home life like growing up? Did you have brothers and sisters?

Patricia Allen: No brothers and sisters and no first cousins. My mother's only brother died before I was born. He was one of eight. The only survivor of eight and a twin, but I saw second and third cousins.

Caroline Hibbert: What was the neighborhood like back then? What was your experience growing up here?

Patricia Allen: Well, of course, I played with kids on the lawn and a church. –

[00:03:00]

-- Went to Highland Heights Baptist and had a rather maternal attitude toward a lot of them. I felt that I had been around more or had done more traveling. I was what we called training in where we took different parts and I researched some of the information that we would present our parts at night. I was very fond of some of my Sunday school teachers.

Caroline Hibbert: Do you still go to Highland Heights Baptist?

Patricia Allen: I visit sometime, but no.

Caroline Hibbert: What kind of role did religion have in your life growing up?

Patricia Allen: Rather profound in that religion is a primary interest area of mine. I do believe that some of that is genetic. You're not gonna hear –

[00:04:00]

-- many people say that, but I do think that some of that is genetic.

I majored in journalism at Memphis State and worked at the Baptist Sunday School Board about three years after graduation from there as a news writer.

Caroline Hibbert: Who were your role models?

Patricia Allen: Well, outside of Christ, I guess Sunday school teachers, workers in the church, some favored at Treadwell Elementary and High School. I was interested, I enjoyed movies. Some of the older actors and actresses, but I can't say that I considered them role models.

Caroline Hibbert: Who was the principal while you were at Treadwell?

Patricia Allen: Mr. Mabry.

[00:05:00]

Caroline Hibbert: What was it like having him as principal? We're talking with some other people and he was there for 30 years and he seemed to be a father figure. Did you have that experience with him?

Patricia Allen: I liked him okay. I did not consider him a father figure. He liked to brag on the football players. Those that for some reason seemed to be getting local attention. I didn't dislike him for that, but I was not all that smitten with the extent which he did that.

Caroline Hibbert: How important were the sports teams to your school?

Patricia Allen: How important was what?

Caroline Hibbert: The sports teams.

[00:06:00]

Patricia Allen: Oh, it was extremely important to Treadwell. Extremely. I think one of those teams made it to New York, the national championship and did quite well, but I can't tell you for certainty just how well they did, but it was big time hot stuff at Treadwell.

Caroline Hibbert: Which teams in particular? Was it focused on a particular sport I guess?

Patricia Allen: I think it was basketball and I believe that group was a couple years older than me; two or three years older than me.

Caroline Hibbert: That went to –

Patricia Allen: New York.

Caroline Hibbert: New York. Okay. What other activities were vibrant at Treadwell during the time? Groups, clubs, anything like that.

Patricia Allen: I was very fond of our drama teacher and there was some plays –

[00:07:00]

-- that must have been put on at the school, but I can't particularly remember going to plays. I remember the pep rallies and the excitement involved in that. The Honor Society people _____ in the Honor Society.

Caroline Hibbert: Are you in any way involved in the neighborhood now in Highland Heights?

Patricia Allen: Well, with the Shalom project that I do consider important and I try to have periodically tried to maintain a contact with some older residents, which of course by this time have moved or died. They're in nursing homes, but I tried to _____ a contact there.

Caroline Hibbert: Can you describe a little bit of what you do with the Shalom _____?

[00:08:00]

Patricia Allen: Well, this and last year I participated in the _____ and I have to help with the first works this coming fall.

Caroline Hibbert: How did you get involved in it?

Patricia Allen: The neighborhood coordinator for _____, least she was, is involved in it and told me about it.

Caroline Hibbert: How have you seen the neighborhood change since you lived here or grew up here?

Patricia Allen: Well, of course, people have moved or died. _____ have taken many away. _____ is just an exit east that is so popular here. Many have gone into other states. People don't seem to know each other as well. Some research that Reverend Martin has done, I –

[00:09:00]

-- agree with him, he says there's an attitude of distrust. I hate to admit that I felt that way. Sometimes you're afraid to hire local people whereas you might trust them as a woman living alone. You're afraid that that might make it _____ back to some unsavory people. I dislike. I wish this attitude of distrust didn't exist, but I realize that it definitely does.

Caroline Hibbert: How close were you with your neighbors when you were growing up here?

Patricia Allen: How close was I? Well, I would hear talk that my mother and grandmother would do. I lived in a house with both sets of –

[00:10:00]

-- parents. They were mother's parents and their home. I would hear them talk about people in the community. They were active at the Masonic _____ and it was mainly knowing people through there and I was fond of.

Caroline Hibbert: Sorry. I just drew a blank. So how have you seen Treadwell change? Have you kept in contact with people from Treadwell? Do you ever discuss how it's changed maybe?

Patricia Allen: I've gone to reunions. I would call my contact sort of light moderate or moderate moderate.

Caroline Hibbert: How have you seen the school change over the years?

[00:11:00]

Patricia Allen: We lost high school about three or four years. I saw it coming. I did some sub teaching in it. I can't understand it. I wish it hadn't have happened, but we obviously did not have as many teens in the community. They're just not here. So it had to come about. A number of different principals.

Caroline Hibbert: You said that you would sub teach at Treadwell?

Patricia Allen: Yes, as well as Kingsbury. A number of other schools in the city.

Caroline Hibbert: What was that like?

Patricia Allen: Everything from pleasant, a good day to horrendous. Most stressful, but I liked it. Some desired to be a school social –

[00:12:00]

-- worker who was there. It didn't come through it technically, but in that respect it did come through for me.

Caroline Hibbert: Have you been doing this recently?

Patricia Allen: I resigned December 10, 2010 and it started end of February '78. It went on for years. I've also done other types of work.

Caroline Hibbert: What other types of work have you done?

Patricia Allen: Religious Jewish writing. I did a _____ school board in Nashville about three and a quarter years and then subbed on a freelance basis here. There were some publications that had three different owners in about 12 years. I wrote for them for about four or five years.

I had a publicity service for small businesses and individuals for about four years.

[00:13:00]

Caroline Hibbert: Do you still I guess live in this community in Highland Heights?

Patricia Allen: I still what?

Caroline Hibbert: Do you still reside here?

Patricia Allen: Yes.

Caroline Hibbert: Are you happy you made the choice to stay here when maybe a lot of other people have moved out _____ like you said?

Patricia Allen: I wonder if I had moved just how different my life would be. I'm not all that nuts about some suburban homes, the way they look so much alike. I can enjoy driving out to some sort of social event or just driving around, but I'm not as nuts about those areas as apparently a lot of people are. There's reasons Highland Heights –

[00:14:00]

-- is sorta' like a small town within a big city. I like that, but I don't like some of the crime that definitely has been here.

Caroline Hibbert: Have you been involved in anything like a neighborhood watch or something like that to make sure you're _____ --?

Patricia Allen: My block of _____ joined in with _____ block. Technically I wasn't a block coordinator, but I have done things like report uncut yards or just sewers that look stopped up. Things like that.

Caroline Hibbert: Did you see a lot of positive change in response to the neighborhood watches?

Patricia Allen: I think some may be coming gradually. There is some gradual –

[00:15:00]

-- change toward the better.

Caroline Hibbert: Do you see that in the community as a whole now? Are you hopeful for the future of the community?

Patricia Allen: Yes, I'm hopeful. I'm hopeful. It's gonna take time and a lot of effort, but I'm hopeful.

Caroline Hibbert: What kinds of organizations do you think are improving it?

Patricia Allen: _____, a neighborhood watch _____ like we have _____ as we did for a period of time and SOS. _____ worked at SOS.

Caroline Hibbert: What is SOS?

Patricia Allen: Service Over Self.

Caroline Hibbert: Have you done any work with them or are you just aware of their presence here?

Patricia Allen: More aware of their presence and thought of asking for help for –

[00:16:00]

--myself. I considered it for a neighbor, but some kin of his did get some work done for him and _____ helping the church and dormitory house across the street from me. I could see a lot of work being done over there. They helped a neighbor cut down a tree that he wanted cut, an older neighbor who's since died.

Caroline Hibbert: Do you have any advice for middle school kids about to go into seventh grade about school _____?

Patricia Allen: If there's a weakness in their family or in others you know, try to let the teachings of church guide you. Let Christ and his –

[00:17:00]

-- disciples be your role models. Don't let the neighborhood gang leader be your role model or someone just because they're famous, made a lot of money. Try to look for the good that they are doing or attempting to do this sort of thing.

Caroline Hibbert: Is there anything else you wanted to add about your experience at Treadwell and the neighborhood that we haven't touched on before we wrap up?

Patricia Allen: There does seem to be a bond among many other Treadwell former students I hear at reunions. There was both some good and some bad there, but overall I see the good shining through. Have –

[00:18:00]

-- pleasant memories and I do think that these neighborhood associations of various kinds are helping students know each other better and the community has helped better.

Caroline Hibbert: Well thank you so much for coming in and talking with us today. We really appreciate it.

Patricia Allen: You're welcome.
