Board approves Duff as dean

A nationwide search for a vice president and dean of Southwestern At Memphis came to a close Friday when the college's Board of Trustees approved the nomination of Dr. Gerald Duff to fill the post.

Dr. Duff was the unanimous choice of the search committee and his nomination was endorsed by the faculty and by President James H. Daughdrill Jr.

Dr. Duff, currently chairman of one of the country's leading English Departments at Kenyon College in Gambier, Ohio, will finish the academic year at Kenyon and join Southwestern in the summer, according to President Daughdrill.

Close to 150 applications were received for the position. But the ten-member search committee made up of five faculty members along with one representative each from administration, student body, alumni and trustees, considered Dr. Duff the most qualified individual.

"Gerald Duff is chairman of the truly outstanding English Department at a fine institution," said President Daughdrill. Like Southwestern, Kenyon College is a highly regarded college of liberal arts and sciences.

"Dr. Duff will bring to Southwestern the qualities of leadership, vision and excellence that will strengthen Southwestern now and in the future," President Daughdrill continued.

Dr. Duff is a widely published poet and winner of a number of writing fellowships and awards. Besides chairing Kenyon's large English Department, Dr. Duff has been an associate professor of English at Kenyon since 1972.

His teaching experience also includes an assistant professorship at Vanderbilt and visiting professorships at the University of Exeter, England, and Western New Mexico University.

The dean's position became vacant with the resignation of Charles O. Warren Jr. in June, 1979. He left to assume the post of dean of arts and sciences at State University of New York at Plattsburgh.

Southwestern's vice president and dean of the college is considered the number two officer in charge, with direct responsibility to the college president. He will be the only vice president of the college and will serve on the college's newly structured administrative cabinet.

The cabinet, reorganized in November, is the president's top advisory body. Other members of the cabinet are dean of enrollment Lloyd Templeton, dean of college resources Ron Yarbrough and acting dean of students Bo Scarborough.

As the new dean of the college, Dr. Duff will direct all academic programming and planning, the curriculum, student advising and the administration of faculty personnel. In addition he will be in charge of the college's computer center, continuing education program, grant proposals, the library, office of the registrar and the college-owned radio station WLYZ-FM.

Dr. Duff holds his Ph.D. from the University of Illinois. He earned his master's degree from the University of Arkansas and his bachelor's degree from Lamar University.

Gooch gift enhances endowment

Southwestern At Memphis has received the largest single gift in the history of the college, according to President James H. Daughdrill Jr.

The announcement was made to the Board of Trustees of the college this morning in the opening session of their winter meeting.

The bequest of approximately $2 million was given by Mrs. Boyce A. Gooch who died December 14. In her will she left a major portion of her estate -- her East Parkway home and gardens, other real estate and extensive stock holdings -- to the college.

To date, the largest gift from an individual to the college was in the range of $1 million, given in 1976 by the late Mrs. Mary Wilson White of Pulaski, Tenn., according to Winton Smith, Southwestern's legal counsel and director of the college's estate planning program.

Nearly upset Tulane Lynxcats reaching for the top

by Ed Archer

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 23. Police in New Orleans were still looking today for two men wearing black and white shirts. They are accused of raping the entire Southwestern basketball team in a game Tuesday night against Tulane. These men should be considered dangerous by all people who desire fair basketball games.

"We expect to go to the play-offs, and if we don't we will feel like we have failed."

This seems to be the attitude of Southwestern's basketball team this year after the Lynxcats nearly upset Division I Tulane Tuesday night in New Orleans.

Tulane is a member of the Metro Conference and gives full athletic scholarships to its players. Although losing 87-82, the Lynx showed themselves to be one of the best teams in the nation, Division 3 or not.

SAM could probably have won the game, but extremely poor officiating at the beginning and end of the game tilted the otherwise even game in the favor of Tulane. The players said they felt cheated out of a game which they thought they should have won, but they would not allow that to get them down.

"A loss is a loss," said center Mike O'Keefe, "but we gained a lot of confidence down there. We are a proud team, and our pride was only strengthened because we were able to play so well against them."

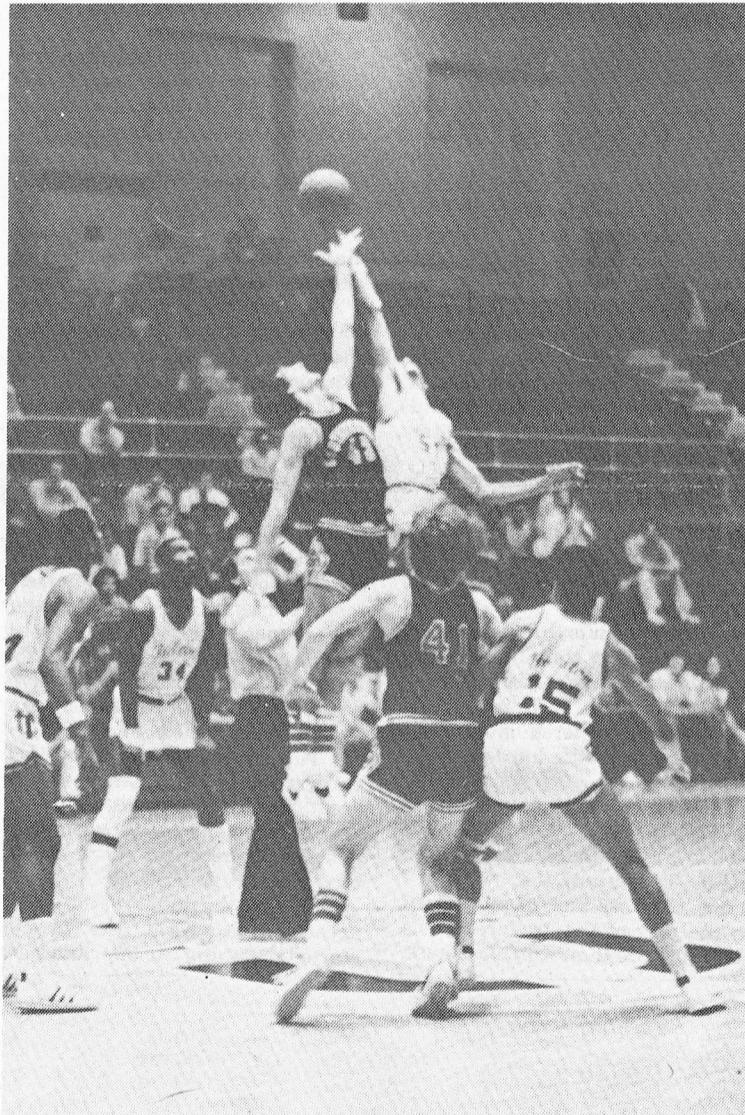

"We proved that we belong," he said.

SAM used a two-three zone defense most of the game, before switching into a man-to-man in the second half. At intermission the Lynx led 38-36, primarily because of the excellent outside shooting of Bobby Alexander, who ended up with 15 points. The score see-sawed back and forth until SAM went behind for good at 44-42 with 16:02 remaining in the game.

The Lynx were out-sized by the Green Wave, but they still managed to play a tough inside game and excellent defense overall. They lost the rebounding battle by only 33-27, a remarkable accomplishment considering Tulane's size.

Tulane was forced to play brilliantly, hitting 66% from the field, with freshman Daryl Moreau sinking 11 of 12 from way outside.

Mike O'Keefe led all scorers with 28 points, most of these coming inside against the physical Green Wave. Kurt Wyckoff was everywhere: scoring 26 points, grabbing 9 rebounds, and hustling to wherever the ball happened to be. Guard Matt Bakke handled the ball brilliantly, and was also all over the court. Ned Hill and Tim O'Keefe played super in their reserve roles.

This year's Lynxcats have proved themselves to be the best basketball team in SAM's history. They are presently ranked fifth in the nation for NCAA Division 3 schools with a 13-2 record. The team is led by junior co-captains Mike O'Keefe and Mark Wendel. O'Keefe is in the top five in the nation in scoring for Division 3. As a team, the Lynx are first in the nation in scoring total, and third in margin of victory.

Coach Herb Hilgeman has developed a balanced offense around the 6'5" O'Keefe, who is frequently double-teamed. With the opponents keying on O'Keefe at center, the other players are able to demonstrate that the Lynx are loaded with talent.

Wendel at 6'4" has proved to be a physical rebounder and scoring threat when the points are needed. Playing forward with Wendel is junior Kurt Wyckoff, whose constant hustling is a major part of the team's success.

The guards are third-year starter Alexander and Bakke. Their ability to get the ball downcourt and run the Lynxcat offense has enabled them to control the flow of the game.

When faced with a zone defense, Bakke and Alexander easily hit 20 and 25 footers while O'Keefe, Wyckoff, and Wendel are able to provide the points when a man-to-man defense allows them to prove the excellence of their inside game. Substitutes Hill, and freshman O'Keefe provide superb help when called upon.

The Lynxcats usually run a man-to-man defense. A 2-2-1 and 1-2-2-1 zone press add to the strong defense. The press has proved to be a major component of the team's success, forcing the opposing teams into making many costly turnovers. It is this tight defense which has made SAM high in the margin of victory statistics.

Ellen Foley suffocated by background "wall of sound"

by Jeff Horn

In Edgar Allan Poe's short story, "The Cask of Amontillado", a man builds a brick wall to entomb his arch-enemy in a wine cellar. On "Night Out," co-producer Mick Ronson and Ian Hunter inflict a similar fate on Ellen Foley by building a "wall of sound" capable of imprisoning her impressive voice, totally ruining her first solo venture.

As she proved on Meat Loaf's "Paradise by the Dashboard Light," Ellen Foley is a powerful singer, not only as a background vocalist but also a solo performer. In theory, this album appears like the perfect vehicle for her. For the most part, the choice of material is excellent and the musicians a hardy, proven lot. Putting the projection in the hands of Ronson and Hunter, both of whom also play on the record, must have seemed at the time like a stroke of genius, especially when one considers their past triumphs. (Witness Ronson's worth with David Bowie, and both men's contributions to Hunter's latest solo album.)

But in practice, "Night Out" is anything but perfect. The production is terrible. Foley's singing is almost completely lost in the overproduced instrumentation, and on more than a few occasions, even the background vocals drown her out. I don't know how this album was released with the mix as it is. Someone along the line should have realized that the alleged "star of the show" can't be heard.

Only on the first cut, "Don't Let Go," is Foley able to escape the suffocating musical arrangements. Backed only by a piano, she's finally allowed to cut loose, no holds barred.

The problem is that "Don't Let Go" is a lousy song, easily the worst on the album. After suffering through almost two full sides of confused, cluttered mess, this final irony is a little hard to take.

Obviously, I don't recommend this record. "Night Out" could have been a great album, but through either incompetence, which I doubt, or gross lack of judgement on the part of the producers, it is nothing more than worthless junk.

Box 724.....

Dear Ed,

Well, here we are at the start of a new decade. Now is the time when we are assaulted by a deluge of articles about where we have been for ten years, and where we will be going in the next ten. Since this esteemed publication has not had any such articles, I would like to rectify this immediately.

The decade of the 70's has seen a lot of changes on college campuses throughout the U.S. This decade began with the massacre of unarmed students by National Guardsmen at Kent State and Jackson State. Riots and rebellion were rampant and hardly a day passed without a protest occurring somewhere.

Things did not start to quiet down until after our forces were withdrawn from the debacle of Vietnam. This scarring incident will not soon be forgotten, and the experience started a process of emotionally draining the American public. America had lost its first war (although "honorably" done), and it was soon to lose a President to disgrace. Watergate completed the emotional drain.

It has taken many years for us to recover from this. We received a slight lift during the bicentennial celebrations, although it was almost smothered by an avalanche of cheap red, white, and blue trinkets - the kind Stuckey's excels at. Only now, with the crisis in Iran and Afghanistan, are we starting to get some feeling back into our political selves.

Throughout this process, the college campuses have reflected these changes. We started out radical and idealistic, and after that idealism was crushed, we turned to more mundane and practical problems, such as nuclear power.

Despite the change and evolution going on in most areas of the college, there is one sector that has changed little. All empirical evidence suggests that it has remained basically the same, with only superficial changes, from 1970 until now. I am, of course, referring to the Refectory.

During my four years here, I have seen three different food services. As far as I can recall, there has been no difference in quality, certainly no improvement. They all have had a special meal about once a week, that amounts to taking the same old food and placing it on a long table that serves no purpose, except to get in the way. Some people have offhandedly commented that the only specialty of the Refectory is keeping them regular.

I do have to admit that I have had some good times in the building, such as when a band plays, or a movie is shown, or when Spiderman used to run through. But these good times do not excuse the deplorable situation last Monday. First, at lunch, I was told that I could not get a bowl of chili, instead I would have to get a chili dog. After I finally convinced them that this was ludicrous, the chili I got looked like beans with a meat sauce. Then, at supper, they served the most disgusting meal I have seen all year. The "apple fritters" looked like lumps of dough fried in fat, the "fish" appeared to have been left over from a fish kill, and the "turkey", well, let's just say I had rather not catch whatever this poor bird had.

Can we allow this atrocious situation continue? Or are we going to demand our rights, such as cheese for the salads? We must be heard, and we shall be heard! Make your voice known now, or it may not stop.

Wrathfully,
Robert Bush

Dear Box,

As a member of Southwestern's chapter of CLAW (Carbuncle Lovers Association-Worldwide), we have been stupidified with the indifference I have received since the Shopper's Guide article of Jan. 19. We seem to remember a section of the Shopper's Guide last spring dealing with a used refrigerator for sale on campus. Not only that, Southwestern and the use of toothbrushes have been in association for years.

Kate feels that the answer to the problems of communication and understanding with South American countries is for people to start listening and not be afraid of what they are hearing. The desperate poverty in the Latin American countries needs serious attention. The South Americans want freedom from their severe poverty so desperately that they are willing to take revolutionary actions to get it.

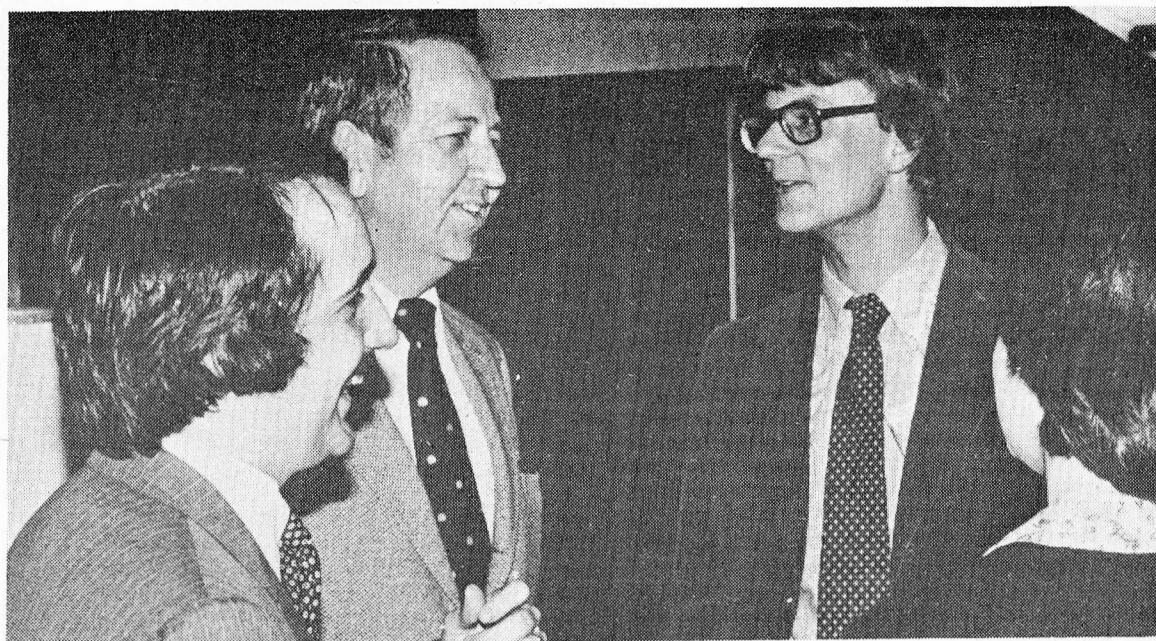

Kate feels that there is a different and less violent answer to the problems. In a report about the conference sent to the council she says:

"The answer for children, for parents, for the world, mainly, is in listening. If all of us can just open our eyes and ears and let down our mental barriers and see the realities of this world, help can begin. Education, ha! I have met many Latin American children who know more about being an adult from their sheer poverty than I'll ever know just from being where I'm from. They are not the ones lacking the education about life, we are. We must not be afraid of that of which we are ignorant. We are all God's creatures and we are all potentially good. It is in us to do something about the world's social and economic problems, we must remember from the start, that no good deed is too small."

Furthermore, that is not the point I wish to make. The objective of CLAW is to conduct fund-raising events for local hospitals. I have already been in contact with Floyd Wimbleton and he will now grow a large, yellow carbuncle on his right thigh as a result. We will also sponsor a Carbunclethon third term on the Whiteball court with novice and expert divisions.

It is painfully obvious that some students have not taken the time to understand what CLAW is all about. Several local clinics and even Prince Mongo are willing to take us seriously. By Easter, we intend to spread carbuncles all the way from Glassell to Voorhies. Some in the Southwestern community may still oysterize us and look upon us as a sore, but by next spring they will see just how serious we are. Southwestern's chapter of CLAW will bring the college respect because we "fester for fun".

Infectiously yours,
Omega Omega Zeta Eta-SAM's

Prospectives view Southwestern

by Rob Threlkeld

About 200 prospective students from all around the country arrived on campus Thursday for a two day symposium entitled "The College Experience: An Introduction to the Liberal Arts and Sciences." The program is geared toward high school seniors who are faced with the difficult task of deciding the way to pursue their education.

The program will serve to acquaint the prospective student with the goals of a liberal arts education, its relationship to career opportunities, and its value as a personal experience. The weekend's activities will serve to thoroughly introduce Southwestern to the prospective student.

After registration and dinner on Thursday, a panel of Southwestern students lead a discussion entitled "Why I Chose Southwestern and What You Can Expect Here." After the discussion they attended informal gatherings in individual Residence Hall Commons. Today, they will be allowed to attend classes of their own choices and interest, thus giving them the opportunity to get a taste of Southwestern's academic life. Directly after lunch, selected members of the faculty will discuss the value of a liberal arts and sciences education. Meetings with individual members of the various academic departments will follow, giving the prospective student an opportunity to ask particular questions. They will be taken on tours of the campus facilities, and will be introduced to other aspects of the Southwestern curricula, including directed inquiries, tutorials, foreign study, undergraduate research, and the Honors program. Between 4:00 and 5:00 on Friday afternoon the prospective students will have a chance to meet with representatives of extracurricular organizations on campus, including the Kinney Program, Dilemma, the Black Student Association, the S.G.A., the Honor Council, and Publications as well as representatives from athletics and the counseling center. Entertainment is planned for the evening, with the Southwestern Players and the Southwestern Singers performing in Hardie Auditorium from 7:00 to 8:30. At 9:00 p.m. there will be an Uncommon House in the Pub, with music performed by Southwestern students. The only event planned for Saturday is a meeting in the morning for those students interested in applying for financial aid. Transportation will be provided to the airport and bus station from 9:00 - 12:00. (Anyone who would like to lend a hand with transportation to and from the airport and bus station please stop by the Admissions office. Any help would be greatly appreciated.)

The entire weekend is filled with enough activities to sufficiently introduce the prospective student to the campus and its goals as a liberal arts institution. The success of the symposium depends greatly on the total cooperation of Southwestern students. If a prospective student looks lost, stop and give him assistance. Take some time to talk to them if you have time, and point out important places on campus.

Cornish to add to Dilemma 'future'

by Steve Kidwell

The "science" of predicting the future would seem, in my opinion, to be an impossible task. Yet it is that task to which Edward Cornish has dedicated his life. Mr. Cornish is president of the World Future Society, an organization concerned with the study of alternative futures. The society's current membership is around 50,000, and includes many prominent scholars and world leaders. Mr. Cornish is also editor of the society's magazine, The Futurist. His years of studying the interactions of society and technology should prove to be an informative and thought-provoking contribution to Dilemma '80.

Edward Cornish has been a member of the journalism community in some capacity since birth. He was born in 1927, the son of an editor of the New York Herald Tribune. He attended Harvard and majored in social psychology. His career in journalism began at the bottom; copyboy for the Washington Star. He rose through the ranks and in 1951 joined the United Press Associations, now United Press International. He served the agency's bureaus in several American cities, as well as London, Paris, and Rome. In 1957 he joined the National Geographic Society as a science writer. In this capacity, his articles were published in hundreds of papers across the country. His interest in the impact of technology on society entitled The Futurist, which elicited a favorable response. Later that year the World Future Society was organized, and The Futurist became its regular publication in early 1967.

In 1969 Mr. Cornish's presidential and editorial duties led him to become a full-time "volunteer" for the society; in other words, the society couldn't afford to pay him a regular salary. He supported his family on savings until early 1970, when he was hired as a consultant by the White House National Goals Research Staff. He held this position for two months, until the completion of the research staff's report. He then returned to his duties with the World Future Society, this time with a salary. In 1975 Mr. Cornish and the society compiled a report for the government on the new field of "future studies". The report eventually became The Future: A Guide to Information Resources, which provides a wealth of references for anyone interested in "futurism". Mr. Cornish's next project was a book of his own—The Study of the Future: An Introduction to the Art and Science of Understanding and Shaping Tomorrow's World was published Tomorrow's World which was published in 1977.

Mr. Cornish believes that the 1980s will be a time of upheaval, of dramatic shifts in current trends. We are only three weeks into the new decade, and already his views have proved to be painfully valid. Says Cornish, "The world seems to have entered a phase in which for planning purposes, and a formal, itemized request to Karen Hammer must still be submitted later.

Please submit all estimates and formal requests to Karen Hammer (box #243) by noon, Jan. 28. Those not turning in proposals at this date will not be precluded from making formal requests later, although they face the risk that the funds will no longer be available when they do choose to submit requests.

SGA budget committee to discuss requests

The SGA Budget Committee will be meeting to discuss several requests from student organizations and asks that others planning to request funds either later this term or during Term III submit estimates of their needs.

These estimates will help the Committee to assess current requests relative to future needs. Please be as specific as is possible to ensure that enough information is available to the committee to determine the likelihood of future grants. These estimates are purely

Curriculum Committee approves Connections

The Curriculum Committee has granted approval to Connections, an interdisciplinary course in which the interaction between technology and society will be examined as a preparation for Dilemma March 13-16. Developed by Professors Barnhardt and Walters, the course should enhance the effectiveness of Dilemma by offering students a source of information on the central theme of Dilemma '80, as well as a forum for discussion of this crucial topic.

Student research summer grant announced

The faculty development committee recently announced that it will award two grants for student research and creativity this summer. The awards are for $760 each.

Students from all disciplines are eligible, providing that they have completed 60 hours of academic credit before the program begins.

Recent recipients of the award were LiLi Chung, Susan Olsen and Martha Mead in 1978; Shannon Williams and Brian Thompson in 1979.

Applications must be received by February 29. For more information and an application, contact Prof. Ruffin in Palmer 8, next to Theatre 6. The winner will be announced on March 14.

The course will consist of twelve class meetings, each two hours in length. The themes of the course will be presented and developed through readings and a series of ten films, collectively titled Connections. A one-hour discussion period will follow each film. The class will be worth one hour of credit, and a term paper is required. For more information as to meeting times, etc., contact Dr. Barnhardt, 219 Physics Tower, or Dr. Walters, 404 Clough. Class size will be limited to 20, so enroll as soon as possible.

The theme of Dilemma, namely the interaction of technology and society, is a question of tremendous importance to anyone. Connections will undoubtedly widen any student's grasp of the intricacies of the question, and deserves the consideration of anyone planning to participate in Dilemma. And that should be everybody.

The Gooch gift, therefore, doubles the size of the largest gift ever given the college by an individual, Smith said.

The Gooch bequest is unrestricted. It will be directed to the college's general endowment which supports the ongoing operation of Southwestern — faculty salaries, scholarship aid, laboratory and library acquisitions and research. The Gooch gift will boost Southwestern's overall endowment by around 20 percent, according to Daughdrill.

In announcing the gift, Daughdrill said, "Mrs. Gooch's gift expresses more than anything else her love of Southwestern and of the young people the college serves. That love was fully reciprocal and the college has lost one of its most cherished friends with the death of Boyce Gooch."

Mrs. Gooch was the wife of the late Cecil M. Gooch, head of one of the South's largest lumber companies. Both of the Gooches were active philanthropists, providing scholarship aid to thousands of college students, hundreds of those enrolled at Southwestern.

They were co-founders of the C.M. Gooch Foundation for financial aid to students. In 1969 with the death of Mr. Gooch, the Gooch Scholarship Fund was established. Southwestern receives a 20 percent share of the income from this fund which provides financial assistance to needy students.

Beyond their interest in education, the Gooches were active supporters of the Presbyterian Church and long-time members of Idlewild Presbyterian. As an institution affiliated with the Presbyterian Church, U.S., and as a college of the highest academic standard, the Gooches were dedicated to the mission of Southwestern.

Mrs. Gooch received her degree from Vassar College. She was awarded an honorary doctorate in humanities from Southwestern in 1975, and was -- as she put it -- a great "Southwestern fan."

At the time of her doctorate presentation President Daughdrill said of Mrs. Gooch, "Everything Mrs. Gooch touches grows in beauty and in value, whether it be art, flowers or the young men and women whose lives she has helped enrich with education."

In addition, Mrs. Gooch was a former director of the Memphis Academy of Arts and a National President of the American Association of University Women.

Lady Lynxcats post big victory

By Dawn McGriff

The Lady Lynxcats claimed a victory over Sewanee Friday afternoon for their biggest win thus far in the season. Down 26-20 at halftime, the Southwestern team came back with 31 points in the second period to top the Tigers 51-46. Leigh Walton led all scorers with 20 points, while Jess Couch and Madeline Watson added 9 and 8 for the Lynxcats respectively.

On Tuesday night, Jan. 15, SAM entertained Fontbonne College of Missouri, soundly defeating them 52-31. Southwestern pulled out to an early lead and maintained it throughout the game. High scorers were Leigh Walton with 19, Leslie Burton, also in double figures with 10, and Madeline Watson with 8 points.

In other action, the Southwestern women traveled to Freed-Hardeman Jan. 21 where they suffered a 83-40 defeat. In that game, Leigh Walton scored 16 points, Jess Couch had 7, and Molly McLemore and Leslie Burton each added 5 for SAM.

The Lady Lynxcats are now 4-4 overall and are very optimistic about the remainder of the season.

Senior Leigh Walton commented, "We beat Sewanee, and we have two conference games this weekend. If we can put these together, I really think we'll be able to take state." Freshman Leslie Burton added, "We're 1-1 in conference competition. We work well together, and if we play 'heads up' basketball, we have an excellent chance at a championship."

The Southwestern women will be on the road this weekend to take on Bryan College and Sewanee, both conference teams.

KA, SN, capture intramural volleyball crowns

The A and B volleyball titles were determined last Thursday and Sunday. Kappa Alpha defeated a tough ATO squad two games to one to take the A league championship while Sigma Nu defeated the previously undefeated and highly favored Bookbinders (2-1) for the B league honors.

In the A league game, both teams had beaten the pre-tournament favorites, with ATO defeating the Parasites (2-1) while KA drove past Sigma Nu A squad 15-10, 15-7. In the championship match, KA lost the first game 15-12 but roared back to take the next two games and the match 15-6, 15-7. Standout KA players included Bruce LeForce, Steve Garrett, and Craig Davis. The ATO standouts were Cal Warfield and David, "Big Red" Landrum.

The B league match on Sunday afternoon saw the highly touted Bookbinders fall to a hot Sigma Nu squad led by Jim Batey. The Bookbinders seemed to have some communication problems on the court while the Nu's had their game together.

As volleyball season closes, Intramurals now turn to basketball. It looks as if the A league championship will be a battle between the perennially powerful Mean Machine and a tough alumni team led by recent alumni Joe Hyrka and Willie Hulon. B league KA and the Virgins (?!), led by Ron Majoris and Wayne Hoye, appear to be the teams to beat. However, several Virgins on the roster may have eligibility problems. The C league field is too thick to call a winner just yet.

Lynx victorious in action last week

by Rick Cartwright

Maryville - Jan. 19

The once beaten Lynxcats disposed of the Maryville Scots Saturday night 85-64, handing the East Tennessee team their second Southwestern engineered defeat this week.

The Lynx took the lead easy but let the Scots pull within two points by the half. SAM led 38-36 at the end of the first period.

However, the Cats put on one of their best second half drives of the year, totally dominating the Scots for the rest of the game. Junior Kurt Wyckoff was the standout player of the night snagging nine rebounds. He was also the hot hand of the evening hitting 6 of 7 from the field and 10 of 11 foul shots.

However, high scorer again was Mike O'Keefe, shooting 29 points, making the 11th game he

Illinois - Jan. 17

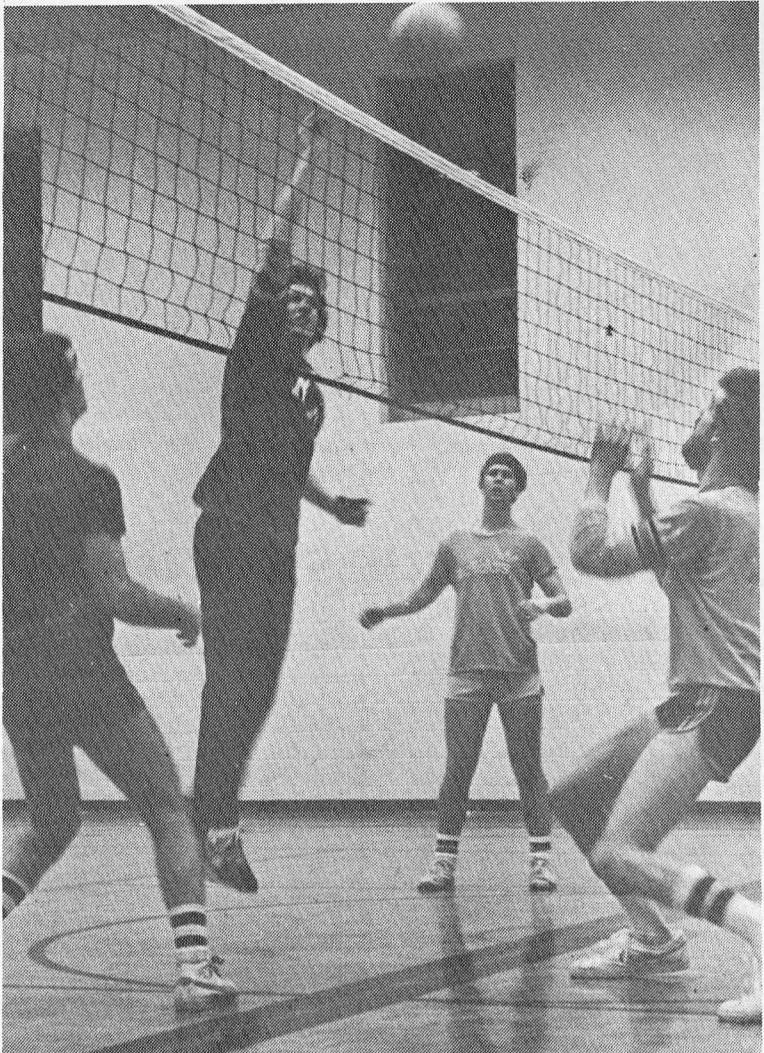

The nationally ranked Lynxcats extended their winning streak by beating Illinois College 89-75 January 17 in the Gym.

The Lynx went into high gear with 10:40 left in the game, outshooting Illinois 17-4 in the next six minutes to extend their lead from 3 to 16 points.

Coach Hilgeman played the whole squad during the game, giving the younger Lynxcats valuable playing experience. Four Lynx were in double figures, led by season high scorer Mike O'Keefe with 28 points, followed by standout Mark Wendel with 22 and Matt Bekke with 12. Freshman Tim O'Keefe put 10 points on the board. The best SAM rebounder was Mark Wendel who pulled down 10.

has lead in that department. Other Lynx in double figures were Wyckoff with 22, Mark Wendel with 11, and Matt Bakke with 10.

The Lynxcats were awesome from the foul line sinking 33 of 39 shots for a phenomenal 84.6% average.
