The Rhodes Residential Community Connection

By President William E. Troutt

Students don't just "go to Rhodes." They live here as residents of a remarkable collegiate residential community. It is a community carefully designed and cultivated to make it easy for students to connect to one another, their professors and limitless opportunities to get involved in everything from community service to athletics.

This fall an all-new apartment-style residence complex and an all-but-new totally renovated residence hall have enhanced student residential life in exciting ways. East Village boasts apartments—most with four single bedrooms, some with two double bedrooms—and all with fully-equipped kitchens and living rooms. Stewart Hall is born again with virtually everything new from the inside out, including a painted brick exterior. And to facilitate community connections among those who share these new residences and other campus denizens, both facilities have comfortable social and conference rooms and kitchens that welcome everything from a conversation to a meeting, from a party to a workshop.

While working to enhance students' residences, we are hard at work also on developing residential programming in new and imaginative ways that integrate living and learning to strengthen social and academic connections. An exciting program designed to do just that is described here by Professor John Hilgart of the Rhodes English Department and chair of the Planning Committee on Enhancing the Residential Experience.

Finding ways to enhance the residential experience represents one of 10 faculty-led efforts to advance Rhodes. We are on the move. I look forward to keeping you informed on progress in other areas as we work together to make our strong college even stronger. 🍀

Bringing the Classroom Home

By John Hilgart
Assistant Professor of English; Chair, Enhancing the Residential Experience Committee

The college has long been searching for ways to enhance the first-year experience, both in terms of curriculum and cocurriculum. The goal is to increase the intellectual experience by finding ways to make it radiate beyond the classroom and into students' lives on a larger level.

This year, Rhodes is offering a Search/Life/English 151 focus program. Students take one of two interdisciplinary courses, Search for Values in the Light of Western History and Tradition or Life Then and Now, and English 151.

The Search/Life faculty emphasize critical thinking skills and organized dispute in class as an additional way to bolster the lessons of English 151. We are not seeking to create a "double course," but a situation in which the links arise naturally and have implications both greater than and different from the courses themselves.

There are four groups of up to 15 students each. Each group takes two courses together—Search and English 151 or Life and English 151. All four groups live in the same area of the residence halls; most are roommates with someone else in the program, though not necessarily from their own group. In addition to the courses and residential component, the full group shares some dinners (sometimes with faculty), evening events and a field trip.

By linking courses in this way, students are able to invoke a shared body of knowledge and experience. The residential component makes it inevitable that discussions are carried back home.

CAMPUS NEWS

Stanley, Kirby Receive Honors at Convocation

Rhodes celebrated the beginning of its 153rd academic session with Opening Convocation Aug. 24 in the Bryan Campus Life Center's McCallum Ballroom.

The ceremony also included the presentation of an honorary doctor of humanities degree to Peter W. Stanley, president of Pomona College in Claremont, CA. Stanley gave the convocation address, titled "The Promise of a Liberal Arts College." (See p.28.)

A graduate of Harvard College, Stanley earned his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Harvard University. He has been president of Pomona since 1991, joining the college after eight years at the Ford Foundation, where he headed the Education and Culture Program.

Prior to his work at the Ford Foundation, Stanley was dean of Carleton College. He began his career teaching American and Asian history at Harvard and the University of Illinois. He is the author of two books about the history of America's relations with Asia, and the editor of a third.

Stanley has served as chair of the board of trustees and the nominations committee of the College Board. He has also been a board member of the Hitachi Foundation and chaired the board of directors of the Association of American Colleges and Universities, where he currently chairs the nominations committee.

Stanley also serves as a director of the James Irvine Foundation and the National Foreign Language Center, a trustee of Barnard College and an overseer of the Claremont University Consortium and the National Board on Educational Testing and Public Policy at Boston College.

Another highlight of the ceremony was the awarding of the annual Charles E. Diehl Society Award for Faculty Service to Michael P. Kirby, associate professor of political science. Each year a member of the Rhodes faculty is selected to receive the award based on extraordinary service to the Rhodes community.

Kirby, who has taught at Rhodes since 1970, established the college's Urban Studies Interdisciplinary Program and has served as the chair for 10 years. Through his efforts to establish internships and other research opportunities, he has made it possible for students to have hands-on experience with city government, political campaigns, Memphis polls and public service agencies.

Dean of the College Robert Llewellyn cited Kirby for his involvement in the neighboring Vollintine Evergreen Community Association.

"He has spent countless hours in most every leadership position and neighborhood project for the past 20 years," Llewellyn said.

Kirby received a plaque and a $3,000 check from the Diehl Society.

Class of 2005 Brings Impressive Credentials

Rhodes is experiencing one of its most successful years ever in admissions, amid increasing competition among national liberal arts colleges for the best and brightest students.

The total number of applications to Rhodes for 2001-2002 reached an all-time high, marking a 14 percent increase over last year's total. The increase in applications coupled with a 42 percent increase in the number of students who committed early to enroll at Rhodes allowed the college to lower its acceptance rate to 63 percent of all applicants. Acceptance rate is an indicator of selectivity.

The 416 first-year students enrolled in the Class of 2005 show exceptional academic talent, with an average high school grade point average of 3.65 on a 4.0 scale. In addition, their average rank is in the top 13 percent of their graduating classes. The middle 50 percent range of SAT-I scores for incoming first-year students is 1220 to 1360; the middle 50 percent range for ACT scores is 26 to 30.

The Class of 2005 represents 34 states and four other countries, with 72 percent of the students coming from outside the state of Tennessee. Thirteen percent of students in the incoming class are minorities.

Members of the Class of 2005 include 23 valedictorians and 19 salutatorians of their high school graduating classes along with 22 class or student government presidents. The class also includes 11 National Merit finalists, five National Merit semifinalists and one

National Achievement semi-finalist.

The current total enrollment is 1,553.

The Office of Admissions will host an open house for high school juniors and seniors Nov. 17. A preview day for accepted students will be held April 20, 2002, and a College Discovery day will be June 21, 2002.

Rhodes Again Ranked in U.S. News Top Tier

U.S. News and World Report recently released its annual rankings of the best liberal arts colleges, placing Rhodes College in its top national tier for the second consecutive year.

Rhodes ranked 44th out of 218 liberal arts colleges listed in four tiers.

"This is a great achievement for Rhodes," said President William E. Troutt. "We are proud and honored to receive this recognition. This news is clearly an acknowledgment of the great things that are happening at Rhodes."

U.S. News rankings are based on seven categories: academic reputation, retention of students, faculty resources, student selectivity, financial resources, alumni giving and (for national universities and liberal arts colleges) "graduation rate performance"—the difference between the proportion of students expected to graduate and the proportion that actually does.

Rhodes showed gains in almost every category, including an increase in its overall academic reputation. Keeping the college from an even higher ranking was a lower six-year graduation rate for the class entering in 1994.

The 218 liberal arts colleges listed in the U.S. News rankings emphasize undergraduate education, awarding at least 50 percent of their degrees in the liberal arts.

College Welcomes Two New Trustees, Four Return

The college welcomes two new trustees this fall, Deborah Legg Sullivan '80 of Memphis and James W. O'Brien '80 of Hingham, MA.

Deborah Sullivan is vice president of trading at Southeastern Asset Management Inc. in Memphis. A cum laude graduate of Rhodes where she received her B.A. in economics, she is a chartered financial analyst.

Sullivan is president of the board of Ballet Memphis, vice president of the Association of Investment Management and Research and a past vestry member and senior warden of Grace-St. Luke's Episcopal Church.

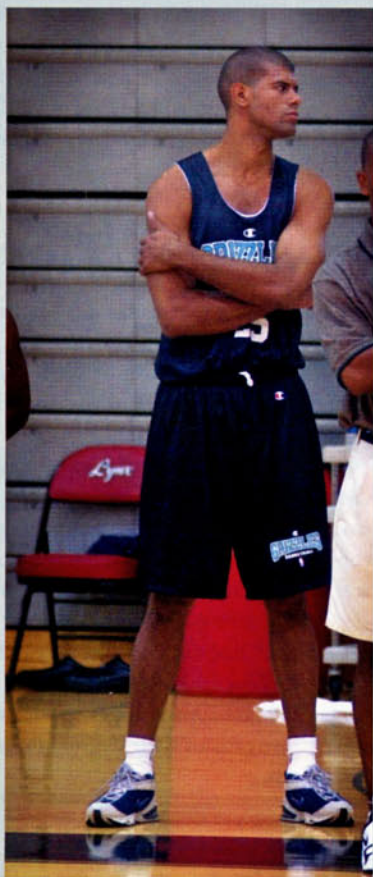

At Rhodes, she serves on the board of directors of the Margaret Hyde Council and has served on the Annual Fund Council, Alumni Association

Lynx and Grizzlies Form Peaceful Coexistence

During the summer Rhodes hosted the likes of rookie NBA sensation Shane Battier, hometown favorite Lorenzen Wright and others at the Memphis Grizzlies' rookie and free-agent tryout camp held in Mallory Gymnasium.

The Grizzlies, Memphis' new NBA team, will split practices between the downtown Pyramid arena and Rhodes through mid-April, the end of the team's regular season. The deal is this: The Lynx basketball and volleyball teams will practice at 3:30 p.m.; the Grizzlies, from 10 till noon.

"The arrangement called for a little alteration," said Rhodes athletic director Mike Clary '77. "The Grizzlies have paid to install a state-of-the-art basketball floor. It's more resilient than the old floor, and over time, better for training. They've also retrofitted some unused space on the lower level of Mallory for dressing rooms and some space on the west balcony for offices while they're here."

School and the Texas Heart Institute in the development of artificial heart and circulatory support systems. He has been an adviser to the staffs of the Lahey Clinic and New England Medical Center on the commercialization of medical technology, is named on two medically-related U.S. patents and has coauthored numerous medical publications.

A graduate of Boston College, O'Brien is a director of TNP Enterprises, a former director of the International Institute for Energy Conservation and member of the board of trustees of Thayer Academy, Braintree, MA. He and his wife, Candace, are the parents of a son, Scott, a Rhodes junior, and a daughter, Meredith, a freshman at the University of Maryland. They are benefactors of the Charles E. Diehl Society.

Returning to the board are Robert H. Buckman, chairman and CEO of Bulab Holdings Inc., the holding company of Memphis-based Buckman Laboratories; W. Neely Mallory Jr. of Memphis, president and CEO of The Mallory Group Inc.; Frank M. Mitchener Jr., president of Mitchener Planting Co., Sumner, MS; and David McWilliams '78 of Miami, managing director, state of Florida, for Merrill Lynch.

Elected life trustees are Memphians Bruce Campbell, chairman of the executive committee and the board emeritus of National Bank of Commerce, and J. Lester Crain Jr. '51, private investor.

Honorary trustees are C. Stratton Hill Jr. '50, retired physician of the M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston, and James E. McGehee Jr. of Memphis, chairman of McGehee Realty & Development.

Student trustees for 2001-02 are seniors Lisa Bloom of Cordova, TN; John Ramsey, Friendswood, TX; and Jonathan Russom of Memphis.

Faculty trustees are Michael Nelson, professor of political science, Robert Strandburg, associate professor of psychology, and Valerie Nollan, associate professor of Russian.

Executive Board, Executive Committee of the President's Council and is a senior member and former Executive Committee member of the Red and Black Society. She has one son, Pierce.

James O'Brien founded Bare Cove Financial in 1998, a firm that advises organizations in raising capital for non-quoted investment partnerships. Prior to establishing Bare Cove, he was a principal at Beacon Hill Financial.

O'Brien has also been associated with Thermo Electron Corp. and worked with Advent International, Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Equitable Capital Management Corp., Forstmann Little & Company, Joseph Littlejohn & Levy Inc., Medical Science Partners, Nash, Sells & Partners Ltd., NUI Corporation, TA Associates Realty and TSG Capital Group.

College Rates Number 1 in Mock Trial Standing

Political science professor and Mock Trial team coach Marcus Pohlmann returned from the annual summer meeting of the American Mock Trial Association board of directors with good news: The national tournament director rated Rhodes No. 1 and 15.

"Every year the director rates teams on the basis of their performance over the previous three years," Pohlmann explained. "It provides the basis for assigning the number of national tournament bids any given regional tournament will receive in the coming year."

All teams are the participating institutions' first teams. Second teams are indicated by the letter B. The current national rankings are:

1. Rhodes. 2. University of Maryland 3. Bellarmine College 4. Drake University 5. Yale University 6. Furman University 7. Miami University 8. University of Michigan 9. St. John's University 10. Middle Tennessee State University 11. University of Iowa 12. University of Texas 13. University of Maryland (B) 14. Macalester

Planning Initiative Suggestions Invited

In his inaugural address last year, President William Troutt said that "our destination is a better Rhodes, and a better-known Rhodes."

He said he envisioned a Rhodes where students and faculty connect; where our residential community connects students with one another; and where students connect with the world—all in new and challenging ways.

Troutt then set forth 10 specific steps to achieve these goals, and immediately established committees made up of faculty, administrators and students to suggest ways to implement them.

The committees are:

Initiative 1: Placing additional emphasis on undergraduate research, scholarship and creative activity

2: Augmenting the way we mentor students

3: Reviewing and rethinking the curriculum

4: Increasing our efforts to recruit and retain the best faculty

5: Enhancing the residential experience

6: Intensifying the thought-provoking atmosphere we provide

7, 8: Ensuring a campus supported by innovative technology/improving library

9: Increasingly connecting students with Memphis

10: Expanding and enriching opportunities for study beyond Memphis

In addition to the faculty, student and staff committees, some 75 alumni and friends serve on a planning initiative advisory committee. All alumni are invited to submit their suggestions on any of these initiatives to: Charlotte Patton Parks, Associate Dean of Development, Rhodes College, 2000 N. Parkway, Memphis, TN 38112. Two Grads Win Fulbright Foreign Study Grants

Tanner Neidhardt '99 and Sarah Lanneau '01 are recipients of Fulbright grants for study abroad.

With the Fulbright grant, which includes tuition, books, travel and a stipend, Neidhardt is studying for one year at the Pontificia Universidad Javeriana in Bogotá, Colombia, focusing on civic movements and urban development in that country.

Neidhardt, who received a B.A. in political science, is a resident of Lindsay, TX. Following his studies in Colombia, he will enter the University of Texas School of Law in fall 2002.

Lanneau, a native of Natchez, MS, received a B.A. in business administration in May. She was awarded one of eight binational business grants to Mexico, which covers 10 months of study and internship in Monterrey.

Lanneau's internship is in the corporate banking department of Banorte, one of Mexico's largest banks. In addition to her internship, she is enrolled in international finance classes at the Instituto Tecnológico y Estudios Superiores de Monterrey.

Approximately 2,000 U.S. citizens are studying abroad during the 2001-2002 academic year through the Fulbright Program, America's flagship international education exchange program. Established in 1946, its purpose is to build mutual understanding between the peoples of the United States and the rest of the world. The U.S. Department of State is the principal administrator of the Fulbright Program.

East Village

Living in the 21st Century

East Village

Full kitchen with range, microwave and fridge

Residence hall living at Rhodes has never been like this. With the construction of East Village and renovation of Stewart Hall, students don't just have a dorm room anymore. They're having the campus residential experience of their lives.

The college launched the $15.5 million project in summer 2000. Within a year, students were moving in. East Village, which is actually two buildings, houses 200 juniors and seniors in apartment-style living areas. Each apartment includes a full kitchen, living room, bedrooms and a bath. Forty apartments contain four single bedrooms, and 10 have double rooms.

The complete renovation of Stewart Hall on University Street, which houses 110 students, included gutting the interior down to the floor joists and starting over. A new exterior coat of beige paint brings the structure visually in line with the other campus buildings. Inside, Stewart is totally new, and probably unrecognizable to 99 percent of alumni.

Both East Village and Stewart have seminar rooms for student meetings and academic use. Attached to one of the East Village buildings is a multi-purpose community lodge with a spacious social room and kitchen. The vaulted ceiling has 8 x 12 inch exposed beams crafted from Douglas fir. Symbols of student life, designed by students, are incorporated in the large stone corner fireplace.

Architects for the project are Hanbury, Evans, Newill, Vlattas and Co. of Norfolk, VA, one of the nation's leading firms in renovation and construction at colleges and universities known for their historic architecture.

"Any social psychologist would tell you that the design and use of residence halls has a profound effect on student behavior and academic performance," says Dean of Students Bette Ackerman. "Fortunately, at Rhodes, there are people who will DO something about it rather than just talk." PA

College Welcomes New Faculty

Photography by David Nester

Rhodes welcomed 12 new full-time faculty this fall. They are:

Thomas S. Bremer, assistant professor of religious studies, received his B.A. degree summa cum laude in religious studies from Ohio State University, Division of Comparative Studies, and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in religion from Princeton University. Dr. Bremer is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. His areas of specialty include cultural and historical studies of religions in the Americas with a concentration on religion and tourism, pilgrimage and sacred space.

Thomas F. Cohen, assistant professor of film studies, Department of English, received his B.A. from New York University and M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Florida. Forthcoming publications include an article on broadcasting the work of composer Richard Wagner in the United States prior to World War II. Dr. Cohen's current research continues his interest in the history of broadcasting and the impact of mechanical recording technologies on creativity and thought.

Robert E. England, associate professor of mathematics and computer science, received his B.A. from Rhodes and M.S. and Ph.D. from the University of Tennessee, Knoxville. He has worked as a research computer scientist at the Christian Michelsens Institute and the IBM Scientific Centre in Bergen, Norway. A member of Phi Beta Kappa, he served as associate professor of computer science at Northern Kentucky University. Currently, his research interests include operating systems, environment modeling and computer music.

Xinxin Jiang, assistant professor of mathematics and computer science, received his B.S. and his M.A. from Tsinghua University in Beijing and an additional M.A. and Ph.D. from Tufts University. His research interests include probability theory, statistics and stochastic models used in different areas. He comes to Rhodes from Tufts where he taught calculus I and honors calculus, probability and statistics courses and finite mathematics.

Robert (Bobby) J. Meyer-Lee, an instructor of English, received his B.A. from Williams College, M.A. from New York University, and will receive his Ph.D. from Yale University in December. His current research focuses on the English poetry of the 15th century. He has published on Chaucer and Thomas Hoccleve, won the New Chaucer Society and Noah Webster essay prizes and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

Mary E. Miller joins the Department of Biology as assistant professor of genetics. She received her B.A. in microbiology from the University of Tennessee at Knoxville and her Ph.D. in microbiology from the University of Virginia. Her research interests include cytological and genetic analysis of the cell cycle, focusing on regulation of the cyclin dependent kinase. Her most recent work was published in the September (vol. 21) issue of the journal Molecular and Cellular Biology. She comes to Rhodes from Rockefeller University in New York City where she carried out her postdoctoral studies and was the recipient of the Charles H. Revson Fellowship in Biomedical Research.

Allan Ryan, assistant professor of economics and business administration, received his B.A. (first class honors, University Scholar) in philosophy from McGill University. He holds his M.A. from the University of Toronto, M.B.A. in finance and accounting from McGill University and M.S. and Ph.D. in management from Cornell. He comes to Rhodes from the University of Alberta in Edmonton, Canada. His research interests include firm formation and early financing, business ethics, the implications of free trade agreements for businesses and managing small non-profits.

Maria Talero is an instructor in the Department of Philosophy. She received her B.A. from the University of Toronto and will receive her Ph.D. in philosophy from Pennsylvania State University. She is a specialist in 19th- and 20th-century European philosophy in general and is also interested in 20th-century literature and the visual arts.

Michael S. Timpson, an assistant professor of music, received his B.M. from the University of Southern California, M.A. from the University of Rochester and D.M.A. from the University of Michigan. He has also studied at Berklee College of Music, Stanford University, Foothill College and the Cazadero Jazz Program. He has received numerous composition awards including honors from ASCAP, BMI and the Joyce Dutka Arts Foundation. His research interests include music of the Asian-Pacific realm and many types of American music. He also brings to Rhodes vast technology, administrative and performing experience. Prior to joining Rhodes he was an assistant professor at University of Kansas.

James C. White II joins the Department of Physics as chairperson and associate professor. He received his B.S. degree in physics from Birmingham-Southern College and M.A. and Ph.D. in astronomy from Indiana University. A fellow of the International Astronomical Union (IAU) and the Royal Astronomical Society, he comes to Rhodes from the Astronomical Society of the Pacific in San Francisco, where he was executive director. His astronomical research deals primarily with eruptive interacting binary stars, particularly accretion structures in these systems. He is a former editor of Mercury magazine.

Quintan Wiktorowicz is an assistant professor of international studies. He received his B.A. from Cornell University and Ph.D. in political science from American University. He is currently writing a book on political responses to economic crisis in the Middle East. Before coming to Rhodes Dr. Wiktorowicz was a postdoctoral fellow and visiting assistant professor of government at Dartmouth College and taught at Shippensburg University. His areas of expertise are comparative politics and the politics of the Middle East and North Africa.

Xinxin Jiang

Margaret L. Woodhull, assistant professor of art, also holds the college's Ruffin Chair of Art History. She received her B.A. at Georgetown University and M.A. and Ph.D. at the University of Texas in Austin. She was awarded the Fulbright Fellowship to Rome, and the Woodrow Wilson Dissertation Grant in Women's Studies. Prior to joining Rhodes Dr. Woodhull was the Haakon Teaching Fellow at Southern Methodist University and taught at Rice University. Her research interests include architectural history and urbanism in classical Greek and Roman cities, Greek and Roman sculpture and the condition of women in the ancient Mediterranean. 🌸

ROME

The Rhodes College Singers and MasterSingers Chorale toured Italy this summer, performing sacred music by early Italian composers in several churches and cathedrals. Leading the tour were Timothy Sharp, conductor of the Rhodes Singers, MasterSingers Chorale and College Community Orchestra, and accompanist David Ramsey '61, Rhodes associate professor of music.

The main thrust of the tour was matching the music and architecture of particular periods.

"Getting music to match a particular space allows the audience to hear it in the environment for which it was conceived," says conductor Sharp.

The climax of the tour was performing in the 17th International Church Music Festival in Bern, Switzerland. Sir David Willcocks, conductor laureate of the London Bach Choir and a past Springfield Music Lecturer at Rhodes, is festival conductor. The Rhodes group was a featured ensemble representing the United States at the festival.

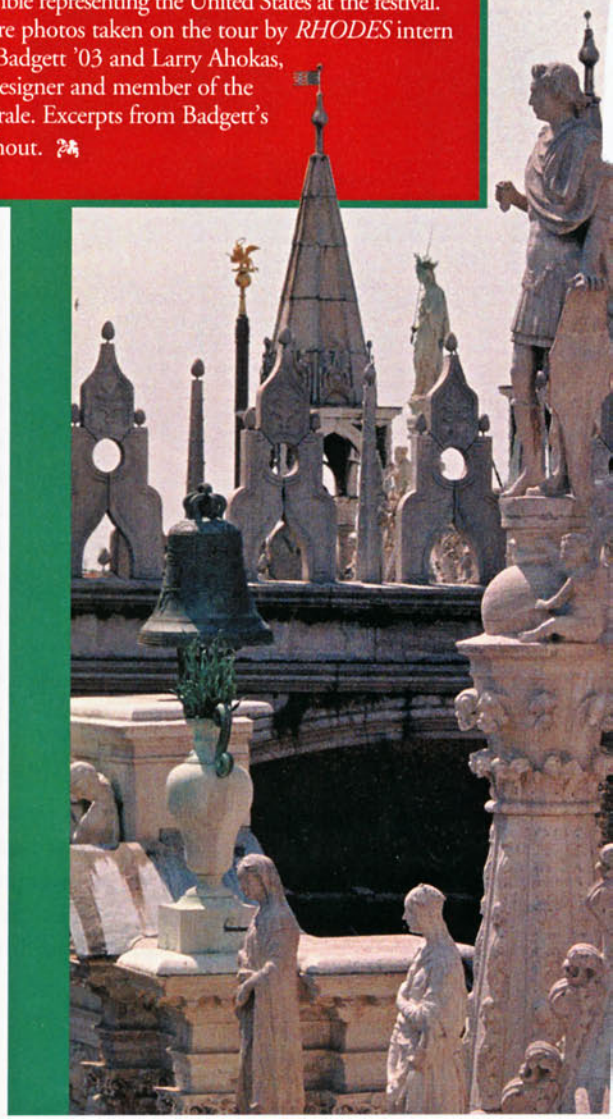

The following are photos taken on the tour by RHODES intern and Singer Jordan Badgett '03 and Larry Ahokas, magazine graphic designer and member of the MasterSingers Chorale. Excerpts from Badgett's journal run throughout.

6/12/01—First night in Italy (Rome)! We are all exhausted, but so excited to finally be here! Toured Vatican/St. Peter's. After singing in Santa Maria Maggiore, went to dinner, then to Spanish Steps and la Fontana di Trevi. Sang on the Spanish Steps.

Up for the Count

By Martha Hunter Shepard '66

The U.S. has become a nation that lives and dies by the polls—political polls, consumer polls, all kinds of opinion polls. Fun but ephemeral, they live long enough only to serve the pollsters' needs. There's one poll of sorts, though, that's been around since the country began. It's the granddaddy of all surveys about which everyone has always had an opinion—the census.

The decennial census and all that goes with it—odd questions and undercounts—tells us more about ourselves than any overnight Nielsen ever will. The British conducted one in Virginia in the early 1600s. Secretary of State Thomas Jefferson oversaw the first real national one in 1790, in which 3.9 million people were counted (yes, there were probably more). In 1810 the census first recorded manufacturing data, and in 1850, social is-

Rhodes alumnus for protecting the confidentiality of your census information. Rhodes mathematics major Easley Hoy '63 is assistant division chief, Statistical Research Division (a position he has held for the past nine years), and chair of the Disclosure Review Board of the U.S. Census Bureau for the last six years.

"My division does a significant part of the research for support of the Bureau on survey design and survey methodology," explains Hoy. "Eighty people are divided into three groups: my group—mathematical statisticians; a statistical computing group; and a social science group who does the design of the questionnaires."

Ah, the questionnaires and their multiple choice sections that beg to know, issues, all leading to today's census of long and short forms and armies of interviewers.

No matter which form you received last year, you can thank one

"just who are you?" Mention the multi-race checkoff on the 2000 census form and Hoy becomes, well, bothered from a disclosure point of view.

"That's a real sore point with me," he laughs. "The Office of Management and Budget determined it wanted to include the multi-race checkoff in the 2000 census. On past forms, there were five major groups and one other group—that was it. You could check only one box. Now, allowing for diversity, people can check as many boxes as they want. If you do your mathematics correctly, in 2000 it turned out that altogether there were 15 possible boxes you could check—one or all. That's 2 to the 15th or 37,767 possible combinations. What concerned me was that I was responsible for the disclosure limitation side, and with all these possible answers and possibility of uniques, there needed to be some masking techniques and some thresholds and limitations on the number of people in those groups before we'd allow certain tables to be published and disseminated.

Hoy acknowledges there were complaints about the long form, which contained some 60 questions and was sent to a 16 percent sample of U.S. households. But Congress had reviewed and approved both census questionnaires (short and long) two years before they were printed and mailed out.

"For the next census, we're testing the idea of a long form on a large national household sample spread out over 10 years rather than on 16 percent of households in one year. It would be a large, ongoing survey covering about 250,000 households per month. It would reach about three million households a year, 30 million in 10 years and be a rolling sample. It would mean less of a burden on a household, and we'd get more current data. Now, with the long form sent every 10 years, a lot of data could be as old as 10 years. Anyway, that's the proposal, but there's no permanent funding for it yet."

The data the Census Bureau receives now and in the future is safe with Hoy's Disclosure Review Board.

"We put out the data, but we still have to protect confidentiality," he says. "We have statistical procedures that mask the data. When it's collected, it's transmitted into the Bureau on secure communication lines. All Bureau employees are 'special sworn employees' who have undergone background checks. Internally, we have limited access to the data; it's on a need-to-know basis. Even I don't usually see the records themselves, only the data afterward. Before we generate tables we do things like random swapping* of a small percentage of the records. We do top-coding* and bottom-coding in some cases, we collapse categories*—it makes the data more anonymous but still provides analytical value."

The Census Bureau is an agency of the U.S.

Department of Commerce. Easley's wife, Mary On Hoy, is a financial manager at the department's downtown Washington office. Monday through Friday he drives her from their Silver Spring, MD, home just north of Washington to her job. After an additional 20-minute drive to the southeast, he pulls into the Census Bureau office in Suitland, MD, home to some 4,500 workers. Overall, the Bureau employs 9,000 people in non-census years. For the 2000 census the number rose overall to just under one million.

The Hoyes could be considered native Washingtonians by now. After graduate school at Virginia Tech, Easley went to work for the Census Bureau in 1965. Mary and her family moved to Washington from Jacksonville, FL, when she was a child. The two, who met at a management class, have a son, Doug, who has a B.A. in computer science from Virginia Tech and works in nearby Bethesda, and a daughter, Allison, who graduated from Penn State last December with a degree in biobehavioral health and now works in D.C. After long and distinguished careers in

Random swapping. Households in a local area are paired according to some key characteristic like the number of people in the household aged 18 and over. Then a sample of these pairs is randomly selected and the household data in the sample pairs are swapped. Only the number of persons in each household aged 18 and over remains the same. Therefore, characteristics such as sex, etc. may differ at a specific location but the aggregate value of all characteristics over the local area is unaffected.

Top coding. For continuous variables like household income the top percent of the distribution is blanked and several alternative values can be provided as substitutes. One value can be the top value of the non-blanked values. Another value can be the mean of the blanked values. Either way, the actual highest values of the income distribution are "masked," yet, the analytical value of the distribution is known.

Collapsed categories. For discrete variables like occupation, if there is a person with a very rare occupation like a U.S. congressman within an area, this specific occupation might be collapsed into a more general occupation category such as "legislator," which would include state and local legislators as well.

Washington, Easley and Mary plan to retire in January.

Hoy grew up in Forrest City, AR, where his father owned a grocery store. When it was time for college, Hoy applied to Ole Miss, Hendrix and “one or two others.” But Rhodes was closest to home and he loved Memphis. Interested in math and physics, he also loved the English and history courses he took at Rhodes.

“I took a freshman physics course with Dr. Jack Taylor, who definitely convinced me and others that this was not our field,” Hoy laughs. But his freshman English course from Prof. Charles I. Diehl made a dramatic and lasting impression.

“On the first day of class Prof. Diehl said, ‘I don’t care what your paper’s like, but if you have three misspelled words, you’re going to get an automatic F.’ I was careful when I turned in my first paper. The guy next to me hadn’t taken Prof. Diehl seriously. I got an average grade, and he got a big F. To this day, even for e-mail messages, I have a dictionary sitting at my desk—and I check it. And if I ever misspell a word, I feel bad about it!”

Hoy also loved history, especially Prof. John Hemphill’s classes.

“It was a struggle. Essay questions were hard, but I got through it and learned so much.

That’s the thing—I learned so much from all my classes, whether or not I made As.”

As with many generations of alumni, Rhodes is Hoy’s family school. Easley’s sister, Debbie Hoy Freiner ’76 of St. Charles, MO; a cousin, Carol Fong Liu and her husband, Robert, both ’68 of Westminster, CA; and another cousin, Nikki Puckett ’00, who is pursuing her M.B.A. degree at Ole Miss, are all legacies.

Hoy has served two stints at the Census Bureau—from 1965-74 and 1988 till now. Between those times he worked at the Bureau of Labor Statistics, one of several major government agencies that employs statisticians.

“Between censuses, the Bureau conducts a lot of surveys for the government,” explains Hoy. “For instance, we design and conduct the Bureau of Labor Statistics’ unemployment survey and process the data. We also do an expenditure survey for input into the Consumer Price Index. The Commerce Department puts out monthly economic indicators based on surveys that we do. We do a health survey for the National Center for Health Statistics and victims of crime surveys for the Bureau of Justice Statistics, things like that.”

Who uses the information from the census and surveys the most?

“Just about everybody uses it,” says Hoy. “Government uses it, of course, for political redistricting and establishing policy. For instance, health or Social Security reform initiatives have to have information in order to determine policy and administer current programs. The private sector uses it a lot, too. If you’re trying to open a retail establishment and determine your customer base, you need the demographics of people within easy traveling distance from where you want to locate.

“You don’t realize how much your daily life is affected by what happens based on information people have gathered. School systems, hospitals, police and fire departments depend on it. In order for those things to operate they have to have funding, and in order to have funding, they have to know how many people need the services.

“For example, my uncle, who used to be mayor of a small town of 400-500 people in eastern Arkansas, said to me two years ago, ‘Are you going to do the census right this time?’ I asked, ‘What do you mean?’ He said, ‘I know for a fact that you guys missed several hundred people in my town last time.’ He had it calculated down to the dollar, figuring the lost revenue was something like $10,000 a year. ‘Well, $10,000 might not seem like a lot to you, but it’s half the budget for the town,’ he said.”

All the data affects the economy, Hoy maintains.

“Information is gold. If you know something that somebody else doesn’t know, you have an advantage.”

For example, to ensure equal access, on the first Friday of the month the Bureau of Labor Statistics issues the unemployment report at 8:30 a.m. sharp. How sharp? They check the atomic clock in Washington. Then, at precisely 8:30 the report goes on the Internet. For the news media, reporters gather in a room where the reports are placed face down on a table lined with computers. At 8:30 they can turn the reports over at the same time, ask questions and file their stories then and there.

“Nobody has an edge,” says Hoy.

The political ramifications of the decennial census often put the Census Bureau squarely in the middle.

For decades we’ve known the census isn’t perfect,” Hoy says. “Historically, we've had an undercount. Sometimes the undercoverage is related to immigration, or poor people in the inner city. Then, there's always been an evaluation survey with the census, a quality measure to see how well we did. After the 1990 census some of the technical people suggested we could actually use the evaluation survey to make adjustments to improve the decennial census. This time, before the results came in, one group, in this case the Democrats, thought they could gain from it politically and encouraged the adjustment. The Republicans felt that any apportionment and redistricting should be based only on the straight count. The Census Bureau was sitting in the middle but determined at that time that there wasn't enough information to make the adjustment. This fall, though, with more time and information they will again consider it for the intercensus estimates that could be used for apportionment of funds.

Where can you get census information? Hoy says most of it is available on the Bureau's Internet Web site (www.census.gov). Almost daily, local newspapers publish the latest statistics as they become available. More data is also for sale through the Government Printing Office and available at some public libraries.

We're not the only country that cares about these things. There are international conferences that Easley Hoy and other bureau representatives attend to share knowledge, and the U.S. Census Bureau has a foreign trade division that works in conjunction with the U.S. Customs Office, keeping tabs on import/export and balance of trade data.

While Hoy has crunched some staggering numbers in his career, he's not entirely been tied to computers.

"No matter what field you're in, communication is very important,"

Coming to America

My great-great-grandfather came to the United States during the gold rush days in the late 1800s. He worked as a carpenter but returned to his village in the vicinity of Guangzhou (Canton), China, where he died. My great-grandfather then came to the United States in the early 1900s and worked as a foreman of shrimp fishermen in New Orleans. When he finished working he also returned to his village in China, where he died.

My grandfather, who came to the United States during the 1920s, owned and operated a small grocery store like other Chinese in Mississippi at that time. He also intended to finish working in the U.S. and return to the village in China as well. However, in 1931 when the Japanese invaded Manchuria and there was war in China, my grandfather brought my father and eventually the rest of his family to the U.S.

My father worked in the store in Mississippi until he met and married my mother in 1937. Later, my parents moved to eastern Arkansas where my father owned and operated his own small grocery store. In 1942, after the U.S. had entered World War II, I was born and my father was drafted into the Army. After the war my father relocated the family and his store to Forrest City, AR, where my mother still lives today.

As for the family name of Hoy, which is not Chinese: Actually, my real Chinese surname is Chau (pronounced Chou, or Joh). The Chinese always pronounce their name with the surname first. Therefore, when the immigration official asked my grandfather his name, he replied, "Chau Oy". The official anglicized the name to Joe Hoy. That happened to many Chinese who entered this country, and at least partially accounts for many unusual family surnames that are nonexistent in Chinese.

My maternal grandfather and grandmother, the Howe family (also not a Chinese surname), came to the United States in the early 1900s. My mother was born in Philadelphia in 1917. This grandfather also moved his family first to Mississippi and then to Memphis before settling in eastern Arkansas. He also owned and operated his own small grocery store.

My mother has three brothers and six sisters, so I have many first cousins and quite a few first cousins once removed. The Howe family continues the tradition of having an annual family reunion every summer. I have uncles and aunts who live as far away as Savannah, GA, and Seattle. I have cousins who live in California and, of course, I live in Washington, DC. It is from this side of the family where the several Rhodes alumni come.

It's Been Quite a Ride

The Thrills, Spills and Uphill Challenges of an Internet Job

By Helen Watkins Norman

Four California Alums Tell Their Stories

The news has been glum. Between December 1999 and June of this year, almost 84,000 workers lost their Internet jobs. During the second quarter of 2001, venture capitalists' investment in Internet startups dropped 61% compared to the year before. Revenues are down, even at the most successful Internet companies.

Yet, many in the industry refuse to abandon their seats, despite the bumpy ride of the last two years. With 400 million people around the globe logging on to the Internet daily, there's no denying the marketing, networking and communication potential of the Web.

Among those betting on the Web's longterm success are several Rhodes alumni who live in California: a young, eager, intensely committed group of Internet professionals and entrepreneurs whose career callings are as diverse as the network itself.

The Attraction of the Web

It was summer 1997, and Paul Ollinger '91 needed a job. Business school at Dartmouth was behind him. What lay ahead, Ollinger hoped, was a career in entertainment. But how do you land a decent-paying entertainment job in New York City with no real entertainment experience?

For Ollinger the answer was Launch Media—known more commonly today as Launch.Com—a music media company with big plans then to become an Internet player. At the time Ollinger interviewed with the company, it produced a subscription-based CD-Rom magazine that arrived each month by mail. Slide it into your computer and you could watch performances by popular bands and interviews with rock stars. More important, you could watch them on your schedule.

Several months after he joined Launch, it inaugurated its Web site, and the subscription CDs evolved into what tech experts now say is the Internet's most popular online music destination.

"I saw (the Internet) as an opportunity for my generation to be in on the ground floor of a whole new medium," said Ollinger, vice president of corporate alliances for Launch. "Nobody had any experience. I figured I didn't know any less than the next guy." He was the company's first New York employee and one of only 30 nationwide.

Today Launch has 150 employees, a collection of nearly 8,000 music videos (the largest on the Web), a database of 150,000 songs and 6.5 million users. Yahoo! Music recently acquired it for $12 million. "It's like MTV for the computer," said Ollinger, an avid music lover. Users of Launch.com can watch music videos at will and create their own customized radio player featuring the songs and artists they personally select.

In the mid-1990s Katie Jacobs-Stanton '91 wanted out of banking and into a career that excited her. She was doing emerging market research on Latin American securities for Chase Manhattan Bank in New York. Her goal, she said, was to find a job that was international, financial and creative in focus.

Jacobs-Stanton began her quest with the search engine Yahoo! Amazingly, it yielded a job listing at Yahoo! itself. Yahoo! was looking for an international finance producer.

"I sent in my résumé and was asked to interview for the position. I flew out to California and fell in love," Jacobs-Stanton said. "Everyone I met was very interesting, very smart, very creative." A week later the job offer came. She is now a senior producer for Yahoo! Finance, responsible for all the investing content on Yahoo's! U.S. finance site (<http://finance.yahoo.com>). She also oversees development of the finance sections of Yahoo's! 23 non-U.S. sites—in Asia, Europe and Latin America.

One of the strengths of Yahoo! she said, "is that it's very entrepreneurial. There's a lot of room for a person to grow and take ownership."

Tech Visionaries and Idealists, Artists and Entrepreneurs

As the Internet emerged in the mid-to late-1990s, it attracted an incredible variety of people, according to Wesley Hall '95, a producer at LeapFrog, an interactive toy company with a strong Internet presence.

"There were the tech visionaries, the ones who engineered the founding technologies. And there were the idealists, who believed the new medium would revolutionize communication, politics, art, business—you name it," said Hall, who began working in San Francisco's multimedia gulch in early '97. "Whether you were an artist or an entrepreneur, you couldn't help but be excited by the open-ended opportunity. People thought the Web would change the world."

Hall finished her master's degree in literature at Stanford University in '96, then landed a job in San Francisco's publishing industry. Technology and the Internet were the hot trends in publishing, attracting Hall and many others.

"I couldn't believe I'd gone from medieval literature to video games," she laughed. As the Internet took off, her job as an editor for Game Developer magazine quickly evolved into a job as a managing editor for Gamasutra.com, the magazine's affiliate Web site.

"At first, I was shocked to find that code was as important to my job as writing and editing, but then I fell in love with all the new challenges and possibilities," said Hall. "I got hooked on interaction design, and wanted to work on a really enormous site." So, in 1999, Hall joined Macromedia's Web team. As the Web content strategist for macromedia.com, Hall worked with information architects, designers, writers, marketing managers, programmers and producers to wrangle more than 17,000 pages of content, localized in nine languages, for the software company's Web site.

While Hall was exploring new publishing frontiers, another San Franciscan was charting her course as an entrepreneur, transforming an after-hours hobby into a full-time job.

Lilla Magee '86 was a senior producer at KRON-TV, the NBC affiliate in San Francisco. Magee had been with the station for 11 years, and while her job was creative, it had also become repetitive.

"I was looking for something else to stimulate me as a person," she said.

That something else turned out to be the Baby Silky, a hand-crafted, personally-designed silky baby blanket that she now sells online through her company, Lillamonsters.com.

Magee grew up sewing, quilting and making her own Halloween costumes.

Once she got to Rhodes, she got even better at making something from nothing as she helped produce, design, direct and act in many McCoy Theatre shows on campus.

The baby blanket idea emerged in February 2000. Unable to find a silky baby blanket like she'd had as a child, Magee attempted to make one as a gift for a friend. Her handmade presents became a huge success, with friends

1 year, teaching English in Japan

3 years, research on emerging markets, Latin American securities, Chase Manhattan Bank, NY

Accomplishments at Yahoo!: Conceived and helped build a bond center for Yahoo! Finance. Users can find information about corporate, treasury or municipal bonds and get news about the bond market. Helped develop Yahoo! Finance's two main premium services: the "real-time package" and "research package." In the "real-time package," users can see their stock quotes updated constantly. In the "research package," subscribers can get up to 25 research reports from leading brokerages at a competitive price. She has also helped create the finance sections of Yahoo!'s 23 non-U.S. properties.

Other high point: When Jerry Lang, the founder of Yahoo!, taught her how to play blackjack at a company conference.

Life at Yahoo!: Everyone works out of a cubicle, even the CEO and founder. Hours are long but flexible. The company facilities resemble a college campus with several buildings—including a gym—constructed around a quadrangle. Up until a year ago, she brought her dog with her to work. "I'd come back from a meeting and find our CEO in there playing with my puppy." Company has gotten more "corporate" since the economic downturn, however. Now no pooches allowed.

Life outside Yahoo: married to Patrick Stanton, who works for another Internet company; 1-year-old daughter Ellie. Hobbies? Too little time. Yahoo! "consumes" her life, she said. "It never ends. Even though the U.S. markets may be closed, the Asian markets are just beginning, and when they close the European markets are just beginning."

How Rhodes prepared her for career: A Rhodes semester abroad in Jerusalem led by former Associate Professor of International Studies Bruce Stanley "taught me the importance of studying and understanding all perspectives of any individual issue," she said. "It also taught me the importance of sticking with what you believe in and what you love."

offering to pay her to make them.

Using the Internet—especially E-bay—to locate quirky, vintage fabrics and relying on her own creative skills to design a Web site, Magee began Lillamonsters.com in June 2000. She's been sewing ever since.

A Ride to Remember

"There was no question in my mind that the Internet was going to explode," said Ollinger, recalling his early days at Launch.com. "Although, I never anticipated the wild speculation and economic roller coaster that lay ahead.

"When the market was fat, I would get calls from management recruiters eight times a week," said Ollinger. He had to learn to say no when a job sounded too good to be true, he admitted, turning often to his former business professor at Rhodes, Dr. John Planchon, for counsel. "I'd consult him on business, on life, on opportunities...to get perspective."

One recruiter, Ollinger said, offered him a ludicrously large salary before she even met him. And the salaries weren't all that was high. Housing costs in Northern California skyrocketed.

"Around 1999, things started escalating too fast," Wesley Hall explained. "It became impossible to find places to live. A number of us suffered from Ellis Act and owner move-in evictions. Landlords would use clauses in rental law to evict long-term, good tenants and rent or sell apartments at a higher

Lilla Magee '86

Founder, Lillamonsters.com

Education: B.A., Rhodes, Theatre and Media Arts major

What is Lillamonsters.com? The website of Magee's one-woman business which designs and produces a small silky baby blanket. She runs the business out of her three-bedroom home in San Leandro, CA, across the bay from San Francisco. The blankets are marketed online and through a handful of stores in California. They come in 30 different patterns ranging from Parisian poodles to moon-walking astronauts.

Why Silky baby blankets? Because babies love them and so do their parents. Magee first started making them for friends. They were a huge hit. "I've done a lot of research on why kids would bond with satin or something soft," said Magee. "Satin feels a lot like skin and it holds smell. By stroking the satin on the blanket, babies can comfort themselves." The blankets are made of flannel, trimmed in satin. A Baby Silky is 18 by 21 inches; the Monster Silky, 30 by 40 inches.

Challenge of an E-tail business: Getting on the search engines is the biggest challenge, according to Magee, who succeeded in securing a spot for her blankets on most of the major search engines. If you type in the words "silky blanket," Lillamonsters pops up in the top 10. She's also managed to get her site linked with other related baby sites.

Non-web achievements: She's an ace soccer player (she plays for the Riptides, a top-rated team in the Golden Gate Women's Soccer League). She has also won two Emmy nominations for public service campaigns she created for San Francisco's KRON-TV. When she left KRON after 11 years, she was a senior producer, responsible for producing promotions for the news and station-produced local programming.

How Rhodes prepared her: "It seemed to encourage independent thinking, the breaking out of social and academic conformity."

price." Hall and her two girlfriends were evicted from their three-bedroom Edwardian flat in San Francisco, but luckily found housing in a less central neighborhood.

But then, around the end of 2000, the market changed. "It was like a bomb went off and ground zero was the dot-coms," said Hall. Next to fall were the Web design houses. Then all of the advertising firms started to suffer because they'd been supported by dot-com dollars, she continued. Finally, the downturn hit her own company, which created Web software. "Macromedia had been around for almost 10 years," Hall said. "I thought I was safe." But in April 2001, Hall was laid off, along with thousands of other Bay Area employees. "I was lucky," Hall said. "I always wanted to work on kids' media—I never would have found LeapFrog if I hadn't lost my job at Macromedia."

"The market just changed so quickly. It seemed to deflate twice as fast as it had risen," said Katie Jacobs-Stanton. "I know people who bought a house with the intention of paying for it using their stock options. All of a sudden their options lost their value. They had to sell their houses before they even moved in."

Even the traffic on the freeways has lightened. "It used to be almost like a parking lot on Hwy. 101 (between Silicon Valley and San Francisco)," said

Paul Ollinger '91

Vice President, Corporate Alliances
Launch Media, Inc. (Launch.com)

Education: B.A., Business-Economics major, Rhodes
M.B.A., Tuck School, Dartmouth

What he does: He establishes advertising relationships between Launch.com and consumer products companies, like Coca-Cola, one of his biggest clients. Advertising and sponsorships along with concert ticket sales are Launch.com's major sources of revenue.

What is Launch.com? The Internet's most popular online music destination, according to USA Today.

Effects of the downturn: During his first three years at Launch, 80-hour work weeks were typical, and travel (100,000 miles per year) was extensive. "It wasn't a quest to get rich," explained Ollinger, "but rather a quest to improve mass media that we saw as self-serving and boring." The dot-com downturn has put the role of work into perspective for him and others, he explained. "There's no longer a race to retire by 35. There's more of an understanding that every day at work is one step in a long career."

The real achievement of his career? Sticking it out. "It's easy to be proud of what you do when your stock is trading at ridiculously high levels," Ollinger maintains. "The real victory is when those folks who committed to the medium are still with it long after the bubble burst."

His introduction to the Internet: "My understanding of the Internet started while I was working at Rhodes," said Ollinger, a development officer for the college from 1992-95. Rhodes was an early advocate for investing in computer networks and technology.

Jacobs-Stanton. "Now there's no problem getting to work."

What's Ahead

The alumni interviewed for this story remain optimistic but realistic about the future of Internet commerce.

"There's still a need to prove business models," said Jacobs-Stanton, noting that Yahoo! is working hard these days to diversify its sources of revenue and expand into services for which people pay a fee. "We're starting to see an uptick in users who are realizing that they can't get everything for free on the Internet anymore," she said. Some of the projects on which Jacobs-Stanton is working these days are fee-based financial services.

"I think we're just beginning to commercialize the Internet," said Jacobs-Stanton. "People still have to get better broadband service so that you can get TV-like quality online. There's still a way to go. But I'm bullish on the industry long term."

Wesley Hall of the toy company LeapFrog maintains that her company, like many, is seeing the Internet as simply another aspect of what they do—as "another avenue for sales or marketing," she said. "It's a more conservative

Employment: recently joined LeapFrog, an educational toy company with expected 2001 sales of $290 million. The company uses the Web to market its 50 educational toys, among them the platform for which Hall develops content: the LeapPad—a tablet that holds interactive books and teaches children how to sound out letters and words. It was the #1 toy in the nation last December, outselling the Razor Scooter and Barbie.

What she does: edits the scripts and crafts the design documents that become the talking, interactive books for the LeapPad. Besides overseeing writing, art, interaction design and audio production, she gets to moderate lively debates about the proper way for a sea monster to pronounce the letter "A". Her current project is phonics activity sheets for kindergartners and first-graders. Each week LeapFrog will post new activity sheets on the Internet. Subscribers will be able to download them.

Past jobs: Editor and website editor, Game Developer, web content strategist at Macromedia, a company that produces software that designers use to build Web sites.

Best Internet times: "I enjoyed 1997 and 1998 the most because there was a feeling of excitement and growth," she said, "But things hadn't gotten maniacal yet. There was a sense that anything was possible."

How Rhodes prepared her for this career: "I'm using all the knowledge I was taught as an English major at Rhodes. Even though I'm involved in tech, I'm still writing and editing every day. The medium may change, but the basic rules of language and critical thought are still there. Also, Rhodes teaches you to treasure intellectual curiosity—and that's what drew so many of us to this unpredictable industry."

confident I can make this work," said Magee, "If I don't, so what. At least I tried."

Paul Ollinger puts the Internet's future in perspective. In his earliest days at Launch.com, he said, people outside the industry told him the Internet was "a joke."

"It's not as big as we thought it was a year and a half ago," he conceded. "But it's definitely the most important media innovation in the last 60 years, if not the last 600."

stresses and expanding the number of stores that carry her blankets.

"But (the Internet) is such a great presence," she said. It allows her to showcase her inventory of unique and constantly changing blanket patterns and to advertise the stores that carry her products. "I'll always have my Internet site."

"It's so scary doing this. I feel 80% approach because the business is not founded on the Internet."

Crowd beating freedom riders in Birmingham in the 1960s. Freedom riders rode buses throughout the southern U.S. challenging segregation

As a historian of the 19th-century American South, I usually spend most of my summer research time cooped up in archives and libraries. This means that I typically experience the past by reading the words of people long dead, preserved in old letters, diaries, newspapers and legal records. Over the years, I have learned to love the touch and scent of brittle, brown paper; I have blown the dust off old books that had not been checked out for decades; I have stood for countless hours at copy machines photocopying as much as the librarians of the South firsthand. Lilly institutions regularly host seminars on various topics of interest to church-related colleges and universities, and only faculty from these schools are eligible to attend. Last year, Rhodes joined the Lilly network, which includes such prestigious church-affiliated institutions as Boston College, Davidson, Notre Dame and the University of the South. By virtue of Rhodes' membership, in June I had the opportunity to participate in a seminar in Birmingham, AL, titled "Spirituality and Social Justice: Lessons from the Civil Rights Movement."

The eight participants in the seminar, who came from Lilly institutions across the country, engaged in an intensive, month-long experience. Although we lived on the campus of Samford University, we spent much of our time traveling to the state's historic civil rights sites. Selma, Montgomery and of course, Birmingham, all received their due. We even made trips to Memphis' National Civil Rights Museum and Mt. Juliet, TN, to see civil rights activist Will Campbell as well as Oxford, MS, where Campbell had worked. When we were not on the road, our group met to discuss the books we had read about the places we were seeing and the people we were meeting.

I had been to most of these places before, but I had never experienced them and their histories in quite this way.

There were many highlights of that month.

During our first full day in Birmingham, we explored the area of downtown where many of the famous events of 1963—the height of the nation's civil rights struggle—took place. We walked through Kelly Ingram Park where almost 40 years before Police Commissioner Bull Connor and his men had turned dogs and fire hoses on civil rights demonstrators, including many children. Today a series of stone monuments and metal sculptures in the park explain and depict the events of that year. Across the street from the park sits the Birmingham Civil Rights Institute, which is a museum of civil rights history as well as an archive and resource center for those researching the history of the Birmingham movement. In a series of moving exhibits, the institute explains to visitors how the movement progressed in a city so opposed to civil rights that it earned the nickname "Bombingham" because of the number of terrorist acts carried out by the city's extreme defenders of segregation. The most infamous of these bombings occurred in 1963 at the historic Sixteenth Street Baptist Church, across the street from where the institute now stands. One of its oldest members led our group on a tour of the church. We heard the personal testimony of a friend of the four young victims of the bombing, and later viewed the 1998 documentary film, Four Little Girls, in the church basement. Never before had the history of a place seemed so real to me.

While in Birmingham, our group also had a chance to meet the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth, the venerable leader of the Civil Rights Movement in the city and the former pastor of Bethel Baptist Church. We gathered at Bethel, where Shuttlesworth, who now lives in Cincinnati, spoke to us for more than two hours about Birmingham in the late 1950s and early 1960s. He relayed how he had survived the many attempts on his life at the hands of the movement's opponents.

Shuttlesworth's closest encounter with death came on Christmas night 1956 when segregationists attempted would allow; and I have become an expert at threading microfilm into microfilm readers.

But thanks to Rhodes' participation in the Lilly Fellows Program in Humanities and the Arts, a national network of 68 church-related colleges and universities, I spent a month this past summer experiencing the history

Leadership Conference, the civil rights organization founded by Martin Luther King Jr. and others. He also went to Little Rock, AR, in 1957 to help in the desegregation of Central High School, and the council later dispatched him to similar "trouble spots" all over the South. Over the years, Campbell has written many books exploring his Mississippi roots and his career as an activist, including his award-winning memoir, Brother to a Dragonfly. These days, when he is not lecturing, Campbell spends most of his time writing from his log cabin-study on a large wooded lot in Mt. Juliet, outside of Nashville. Like Shuttlesworth, Campbell spent hours with our group discussing his place in history and the theology behind his activism. His folksy charm and disarming wit made him every bit as warm and appealing as his books had indicated. His simple lifestyle and sincere devotion to Christian principles and human rights made an impression on all of us.

The seminar participants met and experienced many other people and places over the course of the month. Our group learned about the historic to blow up the Bethel parsonage, which at that time stood right beside the church. Shuttlesworth, now 79 years old, showed us the cracks still evident in the side of Bethel Church as a result of the explosion.

Long before Martin Luther King Jr. brought national attention to the city in 1963, Shuttlesworth was mobilizing Birmingham's black community to end segregation. As his recent biographer, Andrew Manis, put it, Shuttlesworth possessed within him "a fire you can't put out," a spirit of hope and commitment that inspired his followers to continue the struggle in the face of great personal danger. Hearing him talk about his work on behalf of civil rights proved to be one of the most moving experiences of the whole month.

One of our more memorable ventures outside Birmingham was a trip to the home of civil rights activist and Baptist preacher Will Campbell. Campbell, who played an active role in the movement as a race relations worker for the National Council of Churches during the 1950s and 1960s, was the only white clergyman present at the 1957 founding of the Southern Christian struggles of the people of Selma to gain the right to vote, and we talked with the city's newly elected mayor, the first African-American to hold that position. In Montgomery, we toured the new Rosa Parks Museum, a structure in honor of the woman who, by refusing to give up her seat on a city bus to a white person, brought the Civil Rights Movement to national attention. We visited Martin Luther King's Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, which became the center of the bus boycott and where King received national recognition. We also learned about the work of the Southern Poverty Law Center, which is dedicated to combatting racism in every form. While there, much to my delight and surprise, I discovered that former history student Kerry Kornblatt '99, now in law school at the University of Virginia, was working as a summer intern at the center.

In Birmingham, our group spent time talking with other ministers, activists, historians and archivists. We attended a "jazz vespers" service at a Baptist church one Sunday, and worshiped at a predominantly African-American Catholic church on another.

It was, in short, a month of both intellectual growth and spiritual enrichment.

One idea in particular hit me after our first few days in Birmingham, and it continued to resonate with those in the seminar throughout our time together. Historians of late, whether purposely or not, have secularized the story of the Civil Rights Movement. Scholars often discuss grassroots activism and Martin Luther King Jr.'s philosophy of non-violence without hinting at the deep connections with the African-American church. Yet, even the briefest encounter with civil rights leaders such as Fred Shuttlesworth and Will Campbell, as well as the women of Sixteenth Street Baptist Church, make it obvious that the struggle for civil rights was an essentially spiritual movement. African-American churches served as the movement's bases of operation, black preachers emerged as its primary leaders, and an abiding faith in God gave civil rights activists the peace and strength to continue their struggle for justice. Historians who have downplayed the role of religion in the movement need only listen again to the words of its leaders and followers to see that religious ideals played a powerful role in bringing about some of the most profound changes in American history.

The chance to spend part of my summer outside of the archives and among those who lived history during the 1950s and 1960s has given me a fresh perspective on the past and a new appreciation for the accomplishments of the brave men and women of the civil rights era. I can never again teach the movement as a mere litany of landmark events. Rather, when I discuss this period in our history in the classroom, I hope that I will be able to bring to life for my students a portion of the courage and the faith that I encountered this summer. 🌿

The Promise of a Liberal Arts College

*Peter W. Stanley, President
Pomona College*

Dr. Stanley spoke at Opening Convocation at Rhodes. The following are excerpts from his address.

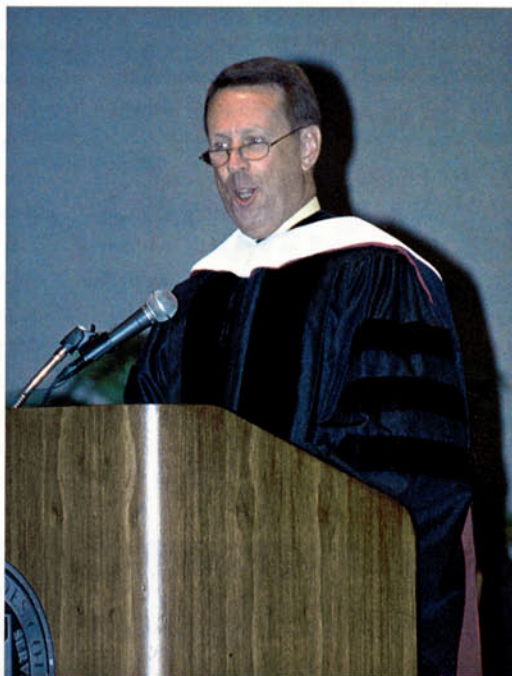

More and more, people want colleges to justify themselves, and repay the immense investment our society has made in them, by producing short-term results: by becoming a pipeline to pump out graduates equipped with currently needed skills, by providing technical assistance, by influencing national policies, by providing marketable credentials, by rectifying social ills and promoting social justice. All of which can be worthy goals.

The risk for a liberal arts college in this instrumental approach to higher education is that it leads people in every part of our society—on the left and the right, alike—to try to appropriate colleges for their own purposes. To my mind, this confuses the role of individuals and the role of the institution. Individuals and groups among our faculty, students, staff, trustees and alumni should care deeply enough to be advocates for causes and ideas, and they should use the resources of the college to explore issues, form and test hypotheses, explain what they think right; where possible, they should do good in the world.

The role of the college, by contrast, is to be the guarantor of this process of free inquiry; it can do this well only if the institution itself is independent. It constrains the scope of education if the college allows itself to be possessed by one set of ideas to the exclusion of others, or turned into a mere instrument for achieving external goals, however worthy those goals may appear to be.

Instead of being captured by one set of ideas, causes, needs or opportunities, liberal arts colleges should aim to be cosmopolitan communities that welcome a broad range of peoples and perspectives, respecting the integrity of each while embracing all in a commitment to live, work and learn together. A small, intimate, residential college stands or falls not only by the high standards and integrity of its academic program, but also by the degree to which it teaches us how to become a commonwealth, a society in which each member (no matter how distinctive her stance, no matter how dramatic her disagreements with others on particular issues) is actively, wholeheartedly invested in the well-being of all.

Dr. Peter Stanley

To make a proudly diverse and plural society into a commonwealth is one of the most challenging educational goals we could possibly set ourselves. It asks people who differ from one another in countless ways to find common commitments and occupy common ground. But many of the social and technological changes of the last half-century have eroded that common ground. The proliferation of cable television channels and special-interest magazines (and more recently the Web) has largely displaced the national networks and general-readership magazines that once provided people with a set of common reference points. Niche marketing of goods and services (and now e-commerce) have begun to displace both department stores and malls, where people of very different backgrounds and needs formerly crossed paths. If you get your news from sources that share your own priorities and values, if you purchase your clothes from sources that specialize in your style of garments, if you listen to music from sources that play one kind, you can create a zone of comfort that reinforces what you already think and what you already like.

People often describe a liberal arts education as a set of sustained conversations. The better-informed and more broad-ranging these conversations, the deeper and more lasting the educational gains. The conversational metaphor appeals to us, because it affirms that education is at its heart a social activity and a social commitment. My hope for all of us is that our whole lives long, we might be people who embrace conversation, not reject it; people who reach out to find common ground with others, not people who withdraw into private space; people who pursue what we believe to be right and true with our whole heart, but are deeply skeptical of anyone who claims actually to possess the truth; and people who, as a former Pomona president memorably said, will bear our added riches in trust for humankind.

The spirit of the liberal arts is the spirit of freedom and civility: free curiosity, suspicion, fear, hope and the discovery of a common ground.

Some of you will know that the mountainous regions of northern Luzon are inhabited by peoples who are ethnically and culturally different from lowland Filipinos. When the United States first acquired the Philippines from Spain at the turn of the 20th century, some of the leaders of the American government were fascinated by these then much wilder people, whom the Spaniards had that they were being watched from the surrounding forests. This went on for days, making everyone extremely uncomfortable, and leading them to believe that sooner or later they would be attacked and possibly murdered. One day, however, they began to sense that no one was watching anymore; and, in fact, it turned out to be true that the warriors in the forest had melted away. In a way, this was even worse! No one knew what to make of the new development, but they were inclined to suspect the worst: an ambush up ahead or something of the sort.

Finally, the work party became so uneasy that a small squad of constabulary officers was sent ahead to find out what the villagers were up to. This scouting party moved forward stealthily and with growing apprehension for miles and miles through utterly deserted forest, without encountering a sign of any human presence. Finally, they heard a tremendous commotion and saw clouds of dust rising into the sky. With their hearts in their mouths, they sneaked up to the site of all this commotion and found that the villagers were building a road out to meet them.

Too many people in our world are walling themselves and their ideas off from one another in a spirit of suspicion and fear that is neither intellectually responsible nor, in the long run, socially viable. But in this small place, dedicated to the shaping of minds and the pursuit of truth, you have the opportunity—and, I would say, the responsibility—to set your sights higher. A more humane and ultimately more sustainable vision of life rises from the very nature of your enterprise here in this college: a vision that reaches beyond parochialism and self-interest, beyond suspicion and fear and pride, beyond immediate advantage and short-term gain, toward a cosmopolitan view of life, rooted in the values of liberal learning. It is a vision worth struggling to make real. There will never be a better time than now, or a better place to begin than this. 🍷 inquiry, free minds, free people in a civil society. The goal of liberally-educated people is a society in which openness, generosity and connectedness trump intolerance, indifference and the illusion that the big problems in life are amenable to private solutions. The world is not going to be bettered, or saved, by six billion of us each trying to have things our own way or associating mostly with those who already agree with us. Quite the opposite: A world worth living in will require us to make long-term investments in each other and nurture a commitment to identify and work for the common good, the commonweal. There are tough choices to make along the way, and some of them do not easily lend themselves to compromise. But you don't start with the death penalty and abortion. You start by committing to engage other people in a climate of reason, suasion and trust.

The more I thought about the heart of the message I want to leave with you today, the more I came back to a simple story that I first read about 30 years ago when I was beginning the studies of Philippine history that occupied most of my scholarly life. It is a story about the encounter of cultures and values: about never succeeded either in governing or in converting to Christianity. There was, however, a problem. The terrain in which the people lived was extraordinarily difficult, and the people themselves excelled at simple forms of warfare. Fighting had for them powerful cultural sanctions—headhunting, for example—and it was thought to be fun. Chroniclers report that quite often, after a whole day of fighting, combatants would put down their weapons, walk over to each other, and say, “Congratulations. That was a really good fight.”

So the Americans were wary about pushing into this territory. But their concept of government, their curiosity about the people and their interest in developing the resources of the region ultimately led them to begin building year-round trails or simple roads into what had been inaccessible regions. Nobody knew how the local people would receive this, but there was reason to fear that they would fight back by attacking the building parties and destroying the roads.

As one of the earliest roads was being pushed into some particularly difficult terrain inhabited by a very warlike group, the road workers became aware

Dr. Defense

At the Huff house in Germantown, TN, if you weren't up and at 'em by 6:30 a.m., you were considered lazy.

"You don't lay around in my house," said Chris Huff, a senior linebacker at Rhodes. "I adapted to that and developed my work ethic from my parents (Garry '72 and Wynellen Weir Huff '71)."

Chris Huff's work ethic last year helped Rhodes achieve a second straight winning season. The Lynx were 5-4 and fourth in the Southern Collegiate Athletic Conference.

With his 99 tackles last season, including 46 unassisted, conference coaches voted Huff to the pre-season SCAC first team this year.

"He was the heart and soul of the defense," said Rhodes coach Joe White.

Huff said, "I know this defense better than anybody else on the team. It's my job as outside linebacker. My experience is valuable because when situations call for quick decisions, I'm prepared to make those decisions."

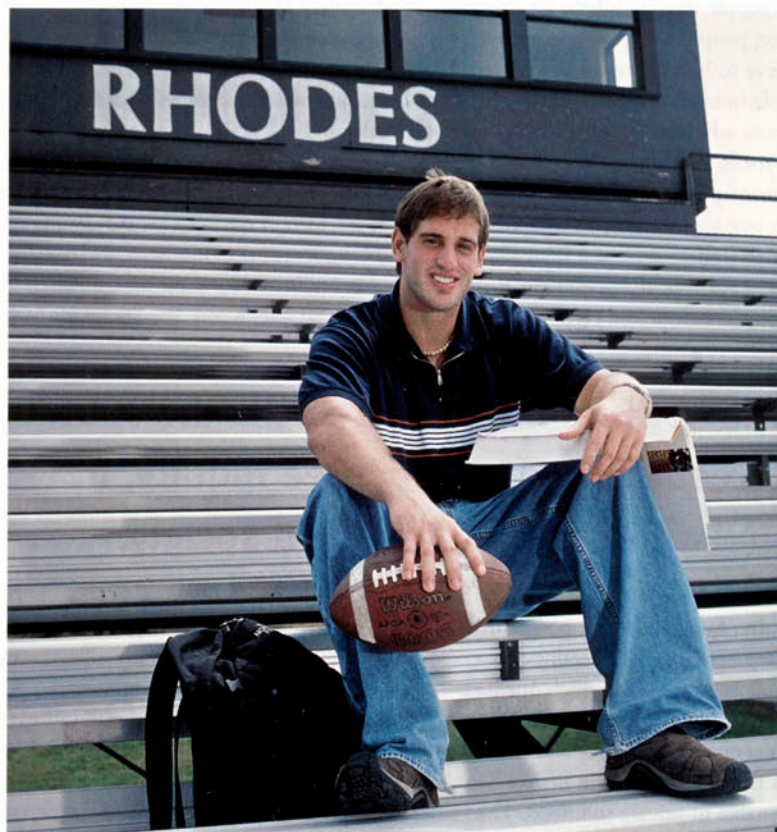

He's preparing to make another decision. With a 3.87 grade point average, he has applied to top medical schools including Duke, Tulane and Vanderbilt.

There were times when medicine was the farthest thought from his mind. He saw the long hours that his father, a physician, worked and the time away from home.

But Chris also observed the respect Dr. Huff received while making rounds.

"That caught my attention," said Chris, who has worked in the kitchen at the Memphis Hope and Healing Clinic and done research for University of Tennessee Family Medicine.

"Both my parents are role models. My dad is my idol. He is a man of such strong character," Chris said. "He works harder than anybody I've ever met but he never misses a football game. He's my biggest fan. He's a big part of my life, and he made me a big part of his."

Chris wants to be in primary-care or internal medicine because "you deal with people on a more personal basis. I want to combine my love for science and love for people. I want to grow with the talents God has given me."

Huff was Rhodes' Male Scholar Athlete of the Year last year and was on the Academic All-SCAC football team. He was academic all-conference in track as a shot putter.

"He is the perfect example of a student athlete," said White.

He also won the Male Scholar Athlete of the Year award at Houston High School along with being All-State, All-Shelby-Metro, All-District and being chosen 1997 Mr. Houston High School.

He turned down Ivy League schools Princeton, Brown and Cornell to receive a full football scholarship to Eastern Kentucky University, a Division 1-AA powerhouse.

"I was playing some of my best football there but I hurt my shoulder in a freshman scrimmage and all of a sudden I'm tainted goods," he said. He has had surgery on both shoulders because of football injuries.

At Eastern Kentucky he found football to be more work than fun.

"I knew there was more to life than ramming my head into people every day," said Huff, who soon transferred to Rhodes.

"Rhodes has brought so much out of me that was hidden. I didn't know that I had the capability to make a 3.87, and I want to learn more. Rhodes has done that for me."

White has seen Huff (6-2, 215) improve each year since he began playing at Rhodes in 1999. He has also seen Huff's leadership skills dramatically increase.

"He was kind of waiting because he wasn't a senior. I told him, 'Now's your time to take over and go,'" said White.

Said defensive end Ryan Parry '02,

"He only says a couple of words but that's all he needs to say. His defensive game gives us confidence.

"When I take a hit so he can make the tackle, he's the only one who will say, 'Great job,' and give you the credit. He's humble, very encouraging and positive."

Positive is how Huff approached his final season. "I'm stronger but not by much (he bench presses 330 pounds). What's changed is my confidence to get the job done. My No. 1 goal is to make the playoffs. It's something I've been shooting for since I've been here."

Women's Golf Team Takes Rhodes to Nationals

The thought struck her.

After being hit on the head by an opponent's golf ball while teeing up for the first hole of the Southern Collegiate Athletic Conference golf tournament three years ago, Agnes Surowka ('01) said, "I don't think she ever played before." More stunned than sore, she said, "I never expected that to happen. It hadn't happened before."

Another first for Surowka was playing on a Rhodes women's golf team that finished third in the 2000-2001 NCAA Division 3 national championship tournament. The Lady Lynx have also won two straight conference championships.

At the national tournament at Hickory Point Golf Course in Decatur, IL, last spring, Rhodes shot a four-round total of 1,270, 56 strokes in back of national champion Methodist College.

Individually, Emily Burch '01 was third with a 14-over par, 302, eight strokes behind national champion Carol Brogan of Methodist. Burch was also third in the 2000 national tournament.

On the last day of the tournament, Burch shot a career-best 71, the second-lowest round among Division 3 golfers this year.

"That felt good to go out on," she said.

Whitney Bryant '03 (319) was 21st, Surowka (324) was 28th and Laura McKinney '04 (335) and Lauren Kwedar '03 (335) were both 42nd out of 81 golfers competing.

"Emily was the person who would separate us from the other teams," said Rhodes coach Gordon Ellingsworth, named SCAC Coach of the Year for the second straight year.

Burch's 76.80 average led Division 3 and was also the lowest ever at Rhodes.

This year's team shot a school-record 311 and 310 in the SCAC tournament and had the lowest team average (82.85) in school history. Rhodes was ranked second nationally most of the season by Golfstat, an Internet statistical comparison rankings site.

"I told them at the beginning of the year we had a group of girls together that we don't always get at Rhodes. We have one or two pretty good players but this year we had five very good ones," said Ellingsworth, who became women's golf coach in 1995. Bill Cochran is the team's swing coach.

The season's turning point came at the San Jose State University Spartan Invitational. Rhodes finished 15th while competing against five NCAA Division 1 teams ranked among the Top 10 and other teams in the Top 25, including New Mexico State, Pepperdine, Stanford, Arizona State, Tulsa, Oklahoma State and Washington.

The team also got the opportunity to play at fabled Pebble Beach. On one of the most difficult holes in golf, No. 17, Burch used a 3-wood to drive the ball 180 yards into the wind and rain. Her shot landed five feet below the hole, which she birdied. "It was so awesome," she said.

Burch and Surowka, who qualified for the NCAA tournament in 1999, provided leadership and experience.

Burch played for two Division 1 schools, Vanderbilt and the University of Memphis. Twice she was the Tennessee state prep champion. She was SCAC Player of the Year in 2000 and has been All-America twice.

Entering the season ranked first in Division 3 in par-3 scoring (3.12) and sixth in par-5 scoring (5.35), Burch finished the season ranked first in par-3 (3.11) and first in par-5 (5.07).

She led the nation in seven statistical categories.

At the National Golf Coaches Association banquet during the NCAA tournament, Ellingsworth called Burch "the most dedicated, hard-working" athlete he has coached at Rhodes.

"We had a period of time where they are required to be there for practice but she did something every day. She stayed afterward and worked more," he said.

Said Burch, "Golf is everything about practice."

Laura McKinney, a sophomore who ranked 11th in the nation with an 84.05 scoring average, "probably made us a better team than a year before," said Ellingsworth. "She did a remarkable job."

Despite suffering from rotator cuff problems and back pain, sophomore Whitney Bryant was ranked 8th nationally with an average of 82.85.

Sophomore Lauren Kwedar, Bryant and Surowka were academic All-Americans.

Leaving for Illinois an hour after Commencement, Surowka said, "There was no time to celebrate."

That she is still playing golf is reason to celebrate. When she was a freshman at Millsaps, she was diagnosed with Hodgkin's lymphoma. She underwent chemotherapy and transferred home.

tion for the sport.

"It made me think how special it is to play golf. I learned you can go through a lot. You are a lot stronger person than you think you are," Surowka said.

Burch, who said that the strongest part of her game is her swing and hitting the ball straight, thought about playing professionally had she qualified for the LPGA U.S. Open or been 2001 SCAC Player of the Year.

"I didn't get either of those so I said, 'O.K., I'm going to cool it for awhile.' That was a turning point but it was wrong of me to dismiss totally the thought of going pro. It was a shoot-from-the-hip-type answer. I can always go back to golf," she said.

Will Rhodes return to the national tournament next season? Burch thinks so.

"There is a potential dynasty here," she said.

From the office of the director

Alumni 101

Here's a quick quiz:

- What can the Alumni Office do for me?
- Name three volunteer opportunities for Rhodes alumni.
- How do you get in touch with the Alumni Office?
- Describe the goal of the Alumni Executive Board.

How'd you do? If you were like most Rhodes alumni, some of these were stumpers.

So, to set the record straight, RHODES sat down with Lisa Meeder Turnbull, director of alumni; Liz Smith Parkhurst '80, who is completing her two-year term as president of the Alumni Executive Board; and Jamie Augustine '89, the board's incoming president.

RHODES: Let's start at the very beginning. What does the Alumni Office do for Rhodes alumni?

LISA: We're probably best known for planning Homecoming and class reunions. But I also love to hear from alumni who have an idea for events in their area or are interested in hosting an alumni gathering. We plan approximately 30 regional events for alumni throughout the United States each year.

Alumni can also call us if they want current contact information for friends, classmates, etc. or lists of alumni in a given city or profession. This is especially helpful when pulling together address lists for weddings, birth announcements and holiday cards, or when someone is relocating or changing careers and wants to draw on his or her Rhodes identity as a starting point for networking.

RHODES: And the Alumni Association?

LIZ: The Association has more than 13,000 members in all 50 states, as well as in 43 other countries on six continents. We're not a dues-paying organization, so anyone who attended Rhodes for one full year is automatically part of the community.

The purpose of the association is to promote Rhodes College, to deepen the loyalty of the alumni and to encourage a mutually beneficial relationship between the institution and its alumni. The Alumni Executive Board and its committees work closely with Lisa to be sure that the alumni program meets the needs and interests of the alumni.

RHODES: How has the association grown and developed during your two-year term as president of the Alumni Executive Board?

LIZ: It's impossible to answer that question in isolation. My predecessor, Doug Fancher '64, definitely laid the groundwork for what I consider to be the high points of my term.

Under Doug's leadership the board established the Alumni Hall of Fame, which permanently commemorates and recognizes the winners of the Distinguished Alumnus Award. Another enduring initiative was the graduation toast, whereby the members of each graduating class are formally welcomed into the family of alumni at the conclusion of their commencement rehearsal in Fisher Garden. We have a creative board, generating and implementing new programs, such as minority alumni outreach, and expanding others, such as awards and recognitions. We've engaged in some long-range strategic planning to build community among alumni through vehicles beyond Homecoming and class reunions and to strengthen our ties with the faculty and student body.

RHODES: It's true that leadership is a building process. Jamie, as you look ahead to the next two years, what do you hope to accomplish, and what would you like to say to your fellow alumni who might be part of your vision?

JAMIE: I believe our most important goal is to further the mission of being an active, involved board. We must raise the visibility of the board among the alumni—we exist to represent their interests.

Our vision is much the same: increase overall alumni participation in the life of the college. Most alumni

Do You Know a Distinguished Alumnus/a?

Of course you do! You have a friend, roommate, fraternity brother or sorority sister who has not only succeeded in his or her chosen profession, but has taken the Rhodes values of truth, loyalty and service to heart and made them a way of life.

I know that right now, as you're reading this, someone is coming to mind—so tell us who it is! We need your nominations for the 2002 Distinguished Alumni Award, to be presented during Homecoming weekend, Oct. 25-27, 2002. You can submit a nomination form online at alumni@rhodes.edu or you may send a letter of nomination to the Rhodes College Alumni Office, 2000 North Parkway, Memphis, TN 38112. Nominations must be received by April 1, 2002.

were very involved in this community as students and I hope that we as alumni would reconnect to the college and become more active in its life.

RHODES: Jamie, you've given us the perfect cue for one final question: How can alumni become actively involved in the life of the college?

JAMIE: Say, "yes!" or volunteer. Seriously, there are numerous ways to be involved, regardless of whether one lives in Memphis or beyond. Admissions and career services need you, and class committees plan reunions and provide leadership in the Annual Fund. Everyone can attend events in their areas; that's a great way to stay connected and meet others of all ages and professions who share the Rhodes experience.

LISA: And don't forget class reporters. Preparing Class Notes is a fun way for classmates to stay in touch and you don't have to be "local" to be involved—one class reporter e-mails her column from China!

Editor's Note: The alumni office can be reached at 800-264-5969 or 843-3845 from the Memphis area; address e-mail to alumni@rhodes.edu.

Jazz Up Your Holiday Season

Join the Rhodes community and the congregation of Evergreen Presbyterian Church for a Christmas Jazz Journey with Rhodes Chaplain Rev. Billy Newton '74.

This one-hour holy, holiday jazz adventure begins at 6:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Dec. 12, 2001 in the Evergreen Presbyterian Church sanctuary. The event features some of the most exciting jazz musicians in Memphis, Di Anne Price and Her Boyfriends with Jim Spake, Tom Lonardo and Erroll Thomas. A reception hosted by the Rhodes College Alumni Association will follow.

All members of the Rhodes and Evergreen communities are welcome. If you plan to attend, please respond to the Alumni Office at 843-3845 or alumni@rhodes.edu.

Some interesting information about the Class of 1961 has come to light from the answers to a questionnaire I recently sent to class members:

•Thirty-one children of the class members have attended Rhodes. Twenty-six of the children will have graduated from Rhodes by the end of this school year. Nineteen of the 31 children represent eight of the 1961 graduates.

•In a question about hobbies, 60 different hobbies were mentioned. It is obvious that the hobbies of today are quite different from those in 1961. A number of classmates mentioned cutting back on their drinking, and only one said their main hobby was dancing. The main hobbies today include travel, spoiling grandbabies, reading, gardening, tennis, community service, fishing and church work. What a difference 40 years can make!

Dear Class of 1987: (a/k/a the best class Rhodes College has ever produced):

I'm pleased to announce once again that our class is doing far more interesting things than just about anyone else, achieving greatness all over the place and still producing babies at an alarming rate.

From the maternity/paternity section:

Wright and Kimberly Collins

Bates '88 announce the birth of a daughter, Rachel Elizabeth Bates, May 30, 2001. Wright completed a reproductive endocrinology and infertility fellowship at Brigham Women's Hospital for Harvard Medical School. They recently moved to San Antonio, TX.

Monnig announce the birth of their first child, Jackson Quade Monnig, June 4, 2001. She resigned from her position as associate with Brady Design Group to stay at home with her son. (Brief editorial: I think Quade is about the coolest name I've heard in a long time.)

Terrence and Jeannie

Beauregard O'Toole announce the birth of their second child, Emily Elise O'Toole, March 12, 2001.

Joe and Cindy Rice Simonet live in New Albany, OH. Cindy dedicates all her time to her family, including children, Patrick, Aimee, Caroline and Emily.

David Lusk writes to share that he and his wife Carissa Hussong became parents for the second time on Aug. 27, 2001 when Phoebe Jane Lusk-Hussong entered the world. Older sister, Grayson, was hoping for a boy, so it will be an adjustment. David was featured in Memphis magazine's 2001 "Who's Who in Memphis," with a spread featuring his bio and photo. Very cool.

Vincent and Jennifer Thomas-Starck announce the birth of their new baby, Clementine Frances Starck, born July 30, 2001 in London. Three-year-old sister Abigail welcomed her home.

Tim and Kim Chu of Orange, CA, had their first child, Cameron Elizabeth, on their fourth wedding anniversary, May 31, 2001. The perfect anniversary gift! Tim is a financial consultant.

That's a LOT of future Rhodes graduates!

From the "just plain cool" files:

Alison Abernathy of Jacksonville, FL, is the global manager of communications with Arizona Chemical for International Paper. She e-mailed me from sunny Finland, of all places. (Where, apparently, she'd become embroiled in a minor scandal with a local rock band. You'll have to reach her directly for the details.) Actually, she reports what she's REALLY doing with all her "spare time" is renovating a 70-year-old historic house in downtown Jacksonville. It's a "cool little place with great neighbors and only 30 minutes from the beach." Sounds like a great vacation spot to me, A-Ray. (hint, hint.)

Dr. Brian Davenport recently just finished Bicycle Tour of Colorado, a 500-mile and 18,300-foot total elevation gain six-day ride, on July 28. Brian saved his fastest time for the last day, coving 85 miles in 3:53, blowing by the Collegiate Peaks. He continues to keep a full schedule of racing and teaching indoor cycling classes at various northern Virginia fitness centers while holding down his "real job" as an associate at the international management consulting firm of Booz, Allen & Hamilton Inc. in McLean, VA.

Lauren Wellford Deming writes to tell this little tale of travel and reunion of old suitemates: Curtis and Alice McCarthy Finn visited the Demings in July on their trip through Canada, Washington and Oregon. After a quick stop at Portland's 24-hour Church of Elvis, Lauren and husband, Will, took them on a tour of Oregon wine country. Fun was had by all. (She always was a big Elvis fan, that Alice.)

I got to visit Memphis recently to attend the Memphis Theatre Awards, and had dinner with Sam Briden Duke and her husband, Brit. One major topic of discussion between us was what horrors we are going to inflict on you all for our 15th reunion next year.

Here are some professional updates:

Shawn Abel molds young minds by teaching algebra and honors pre-calculus at Collierville (Tennessee) High School, where he's also an assistant varsity football coach. Go, Shawn!

Karen Cagle York, her husband, Steve, and daughter, Rachel, have made a big move from Memphis to Evanston IL, where Karen is the director of work/life and human resources for Rauland-Borg Corp. and serves on the company's executive team. Steve is a pilot for North American Jet, and Rachel has begun junior kindergarten at The Roycemore School. Karen, do you realize how COLD winters are up there? Bundle up!

Sherrie Keeney Hollis of Eads, TN, is currently the director of expense administration at Primacy Relocation.

Mary Munn Laronge of Marlborough, MA, is a travel consultant. She and her husband, Joshua, will celebrate their first wedding anniversary Nov. 11.

Jim Springfield, formerly an engineer with Microsoft, is now a CTO with Premise Systems Inc.

Charlotte Cooper Gaskins has taken a leave of absence from her job as a faculty member in business law at Central Piedmont Community College. She writes, "My five-year-old, Rebecca, started kindergarten, and I'm watching my two-year-old, Katie."

Katie would be Katherine Bres Ware's godchild, by the way.

I hope I've covered everyone's news. Keep writing, folks. Keep doing great things and having great babies. Oh, and mark your calendars for our 15th reunion Oct. 25-26, 2002!

Reporting live,
Brian

'85 Richard F. "Ricky" White of Tuscaloosa, AL, Aug. 26, 2001. Head basketball coach and assistant football coach at Jackson (Alabama) Academy, he had also coached at Wilcox Academy in Camden, AL, and Tuscaloosa Academy, his alma mater. For several years he umpired children's T-ball games and refereed basketball games. After graduating from Rhodes, he returned home to Tuscaloosa to work for Associated Financial Corp. He was a member of the Rhodes men's basketball team for four years. Coach Herb Hilgeman described White as "the ultimate team player," and teammates like Scott Patterson '85 admired his "incredible passion for basketball and for people." He leaves his parents, Richard and Virginia White, and his aunt, Sandra Pickens.

To honor White's passion and devotion to the game, his teammates and friends have established a memorial fund to benefit the Rhodes basketball program. Anyone who wishes to contribute to this fund may do so by sending donations made payable to Rhodes College and noting that the gift is intended for the Ricky White Memorial Basketball Fund. The gift may be renewed annually.

RHODES

Honor Roll of Donors

2000-2001

Thank you for helping make this a breakthrough year for Rhodes. You and others who gave so generously are enabling the college to soar to new heights.

In a year of an uncertain economy, Rhodes alumni, parents and friends continued to create new levels of support:

- the year's $41 million total in gifts is a college record;
- the $35 million gift of the Paul Barret Jr. Trust is one of the largest capital gifts ever received by a liberal arts college;
- the $2,950,000 in unrestricted dollars given to the Annual Fund is the largest amount in Rhodes' history;
- and the Charles E. Diehl and The Red & Black Societies showed record levels in membership increases as well as in gifts.

Alumni giving alone is impressive testimony to the lasting impact the college has on our students' lives: The annual support of 50% of Rhodes alumni represents a level achieved by fewer than 1% of all colleges and universities in the country.

We are grateful for your generosity and support. You make it possible for Rhodes to build upon time-honored academic and social traditions in new and exciting ways, reaching new generations with a rich and timeless legacy.

Sincerely,

William E. Troutt
President

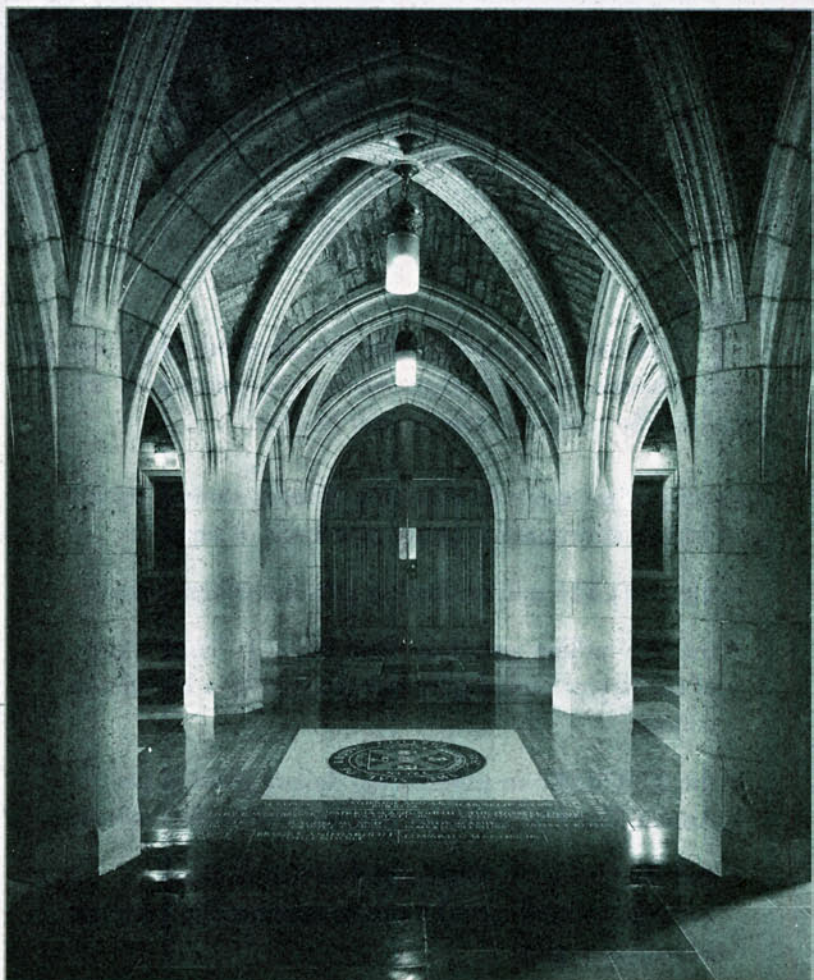

Giving Highlights of 2000-2001

An important contributor to and measure of Rhodes' strength is the financial support provided by alumni, parents and friends this past year. Here are just a few of the accomplishments and events that warrant special recognition.

- Total gifts to the college this year amounted to more than $41 million, with $35 million from the Paul Barret Jr. Trust. This is the highest annual total in the history of Rhodes.
- A record $4 million came to Rhodes as Annual Fund gifts with $2.95 million unrestricted.
- Alumni participation hit 50% for the third year in a row, a percentage reached by fewer than 1% of the nation's colleges and universities.
- The Charles E. Diehl Society under the leadership of President Wayne Steele Sharp '75 set an all-time record of support raising $1.42 million with 130 members, a 9% increase in membership over last year.
- The Red & Black Society led by Mike Edwards '79 had another record-breaking year in both gifts and membership. Members gave 6.4% more than last year—almost $685,000—and membership reached 537, an increase of 4.8% over last year.
- More than $1 million in gifts committed for scholarships claimed more than $1 million in matching funds from the Rhodes Scholarship Challenge Initiative. The dollar for dollar match runs until December 31, 2001.
- The President's Award for the largest class gift ($119,000) will be presented to the Class of '74 for the third consecutive year.
- The Golden Lynx Award for the largest gift from a class graduated 50 years or more will be awarded to the Class of '51 for its 50th Reunion Annual Fund gift of $93,354.
- The Margaret Hyde Council awarded scholarships for study abroad to 16 students with financial need. Three students received emergency assistance grants enabling them to stay enrolled.

Charles E. Diehl Society

Wayne Steele Sharp '75, President

The Diehl Society is named for Charles E. Diehl, who served as College President from 1917-49. The Society recognizes individuals who have provided generous financial support for the operation of the college as well as leadership, loyalty, and expertise throughout the year.

Endowed Circle of the Charles E. Diehl Society

To ensure Rhodes' continuing financial strength, unrestricted endowment gifts can be made to fund perpetual memberships in the Charles E. Diehl Society. These unrestricted gifts may be either current or deferred or some combination of the two. They are recognized with membership in the Endowed Circle.

Outstanding Alumni Volunteer Award To Be Presented at Homecoming

Michael A. Edwards '79 has been named the Outstanding Alumni Volunteer for 2000-2001. Alumni will honor him for his work as president of The Red & Black Executive Committee during Alumni Convocation at Homecoming weekend this fall.

This year, as president of The Red & Black Executive Committee, Mike helped set a new record, raising $685,000 for the Annual Fund—a 6.4% increase over the previous year. Last year, as alumni chair of the 1999-2000 Rhodes Annual Fund, Mike led a fund-raising effort in which alumni contributed more than $1 million to the Annual Fund for the first time in Rhodes' history.

Mike has been involved with Rhodes in many other capacities. He has served as a member of the President's Council, Alumni Association Executive Board, Scholarship Committee, Athletic Hall of Fame Selection Committee, and the 150th Anniversary Campaign Associates.

Paul and Mary Jane Smalley Roberts '58

Mary Jane Smalley Roberts '58 and her husband, Paul, wanted to provide for future students, cash in appreciated stock, reduce the size of their taxable estate and have Rhodes send them checks for the rest of their lives. By establishing a charitable remainder unitrust at Rhodes they accomplished it all. Upon their deaths, the remainder of the trust will establish scholarships for Rhodes students to study internationally.

Mary Jane's life changed dramatically when Dr. Laurence Kinney suggested that she apply for a Fulbright Scholarship. The student who had never ventured out of the South spent a year studying in France. After she traveled abroad, she worked to provide similar opportunities for others. Her career culminated as deputy director of the Council for International Exchange of Scholars, where she directed programs for American and visiting scholars under the Fulbright and other special programs of international academic exchange. She determined policy that guided the competition of 3,000 U.S. scholars and administered the grants of 1,000 visiting scholars from 60 countries.

Coming full circle, Mary Jane and Paul are making sure that future Rhodes students will have opportunities to live and study immersed in other cultures.

Message from the Chair

We are very pleased to recognize the many donors who made 2000-2001 an exciting year for women at Rhodes. Since its inception in 1996, The Margaret Hyde Council has provided 53 deserving students opportunities for enriched academic and personal growth. During the last academic year, 16 students received scholarships for study abroad in programs ranging from a summer service project in Honduras to a semester of European Studies. Three students facing unexpected financial crises received emergency assistance grants enabling them to stay enrolled at Rhodes. These life-changing experiences were made possible by the support of alumnae and friends who have committed more than $3 million for scholarships and financial aid. Thank you for your generous support and commitment to preparing young Rhodes women to embrace the opportunities and challenges of the 21st century.

Sincerely,
Theresa Cloys Carl '75

Scholarships and Restricted Funds

The following endowed and restricted funds were established this year:

The E. Rhodes and Leona B. Carpenter Foundation provided funds for the restoration and framing of Japanese woodblock prints from the college's Clough Collection.

The Alice S. Christenson Scholarship was created in her honor by her son, Gray Stevens '82 and his wife Allison. It benefits students of high academic ability with demonstrated financial need. Preference is given to students from Alabama.

The Patsy Braswell Culverhouse '54 Scholarship was created in her memory by her husband Cecil Culverhouse and their sons Ian and Rob. The scholarship benefits a young woman who would not be able to attend Rhodes without financial aid.

The Dickson Family Scholarship is provided by Dr. Bonnie Adair Dickson and the late Frederick L. Dickson, Jr. '38 and the late Elizabeth Blue Dickson '39.

The James O. Finley '26 Family Scholarship will provide financial aid with preference for students from Middle Tennessee.

The Edgar Wiggin Francisco Scholarship was established by Dr. Francisco, an alumnus of the class of 1952 in honor of his 50th Class Reunion.

The Julia Johnson Garrett '01 Library Collection is provided by the family of recent graduate Julia Garrett. The special resource collection will be housed in the new Paul Barret, Jr. Library, scheduled to open in fall 2004.

The Ethel Ashton Harrell '54 Scholarship, established by Dr. Harrell in 2001, gives preference to female students with documented financial need.

The Imelda and Hubert Henkel Scholarship was created in their memory by their four children, all of whom are Rhodes graduates—Mike '79 and Frances Clevenger Henkel '79, Tim Henkel '81, Keith '83 and Linda Somerville Henkel '83, and Michelle Henkel '86.

The Kristin D. and Vernon S. Hurst Scholarship for British Studies, established by alumna Kristin Dwell Hurst '88 and her husband Vernon, provides aid for a Rhodes student participating in British Studies at Oxford.

The Wasfy Iskander International Internship was provided by family and friends of the late economics professor. Preference will be given to a student majoring in economics.

The Wendy and Bill Jacoway Scholarship was created by alumnus William H. Jacoway '62 and his wife Wendy.

The Morelle Legg International Internship for Women, established by an anonymous donor, will provide international internship opportunities with preference given to female economics/business administration majors.

The Robert Mann '47 Scholarship was provided through a bequest to provide financial aid for music students.

The Gail McClay Scholarship was established in her memory by family, colleagues and former students. Gail McClay was Associate Professor and Chair of the Education Department until her death in 1999. The McClay Scholarship benefits students in education with demonstrated financial need.

The Michaelcheck Faculty Support Fund was established by Rhodes trustee William J. Michaelcheck '69 to provide support for faculty travel.

The Fred W. Neal Scholarship was established by family and friends of the late Dr. Neal, Professor Emeritus of Religious Studies, at the time of his death in 1997.

The Overend Endowment for Film Studies, created by the Overend Family of Atlanta, will provide support for a film studies program in the English department.

The Rich Memorial International Scholarship, created by Mary Jack Rich McCord '51, provides aid for study abroad to students with demonstrated financial need. Preference will be given to women.

The Lorna Anderson Reimers Scholarship was established through a bequest from the late Rhodes trustee of Jackson, MS.

The David Charles Scott Memorial Scholarship, created in 2000 by Rae Nell M. Scott in memory of her son, benefits a student enrolled in the International Cotton Institute at Rhodes.

The Jack H. Taylor Scholarship was established by Harry L. Swinney '61 in honor of his Rhodes mentor, Jack H. Taylor '44, Professor Emeritus of Physics. The scholarship is restricted to students majoring in the physical and biological sciences.

The Jim and Jackie Williamson Scholarship was created by James C. Williamson '50 and Jacqueline Newman Williamson '52 in honor of their 50th class reunions.

The strength and success of Rhodes College lies in the support received from alumni, parents, faculty, staff and friends. Without this support Rhodes could not offer the highest quality education or continue to attract top-notch faculty and outstanding students. Among our most generous and devoted supporters, there is a special group who must be recognized. These supporters, recognized by a star (*), are alumni, parents, faculty, staff, friends, businesses, churches and foundations who have made a gift to Rhodes' Annual Fund consecutively for 10 years or more. Their loyalty and continued support push Rhodes to the forefront as one of the top liberal arts colleges in the world.

W. Henry Mosley '55 Distinguished Alumni Award

Henry Mosley's career in international health began with a short-term tour investigating a cholera epidemic in the Philippines while an epidemic intelligence officer with the Centers for Disease Control. This led to an appointment as head of the Epidemiology Division at the Pakistan SEATO Cholera Research Laboratory in Dhaka, East Pakistan (now Bangladesh). During his six years in Dhaka, his research led to the removal of the ineffective cholera vaccine from international quarantine regulations and established oral rehydration therapy as a lifesaving measure for cholera and other diarrheal diseases.

In 1971 Henry was appointed professor and chairman of the new multidisciplinary Department of Population Dynamics at The Johns Hopkins University School of Public Health. He returned to Bangladesh in 1976 to direct the transformation of the Cholera Research Laboratory to the International Center for Diarrheal Disease Research, Bangladesh, now the leading health and population research center in the developing world.

After visiting professorships and directorships in Nairobi, Kenya and Jakarta, Indonesia, Henry returned to Johns Hopkins in 1985 as chairman of the Department of Population Dynamics, a post he held until 1998. He is currently establishing collaborating centers for training in strategic leadership in population and reproductive health in several countries, including China, Indonesia, Philippines and Uganda.

Susan Wood '70 Distinguished Alumni Award

As deputy assistant secretary for Western Hemisphere affairs and coordinator for Canada, Susan Wood is responsible for a broad range of U.S. policy toward Canada, Panama and the six countries of Central America, as well as for public diplomacy and public affairs programs throughout the hemisphere. A career member of the senior foreign service with the rank of minister-counselor, Susan served previously as deputy chief of mission in Ecuador and consul general in Russia, Canada, France and Indonesia. Since entering the foreign service in 1972, she has also served in the Philippines, Italy, and Haiti.

A native of Mississippi, Susan was a summer exchange student in Chile and spent a semester in Spain, both with The Experiment in International Living. Immediately after graduating from Rhodes with honors in philosophy, she spent a year as a Fulbright Scholar at the Universidad Nacional de Cuyo in Argentina. While in the foreign service, she has earned a master of public administration degree from Harvard University and completed political-military studies as a U.S. member of the NATO Defense College in Italy.

Susan has received the secretary of state's Consular Service Award and other honors from the U.S. government for assistance to American citizens overseas. She speaks Spanish, French, Russian, Italian, Indonesian and Haitian Creole.

Class of 1991: A Class on the Rise

The first 10 years after commencement can be a time of great transition. Alumni, on average, move seven times in their first 10 years after graduation. Finding the perfect career and starting new families bring new challenges.

While members of the Class of 1991 have achieved significant gains in their careers, they have also shown their appreciation for their alma mater by supporting the Annual Fund. Elizabeth Pearce and Paul Ollinger led the Class of 1991 Reunion Gift Campaign Committee to success. The class's total gift was $24,304, exceeding its goal by $10,804.

Through the special peer-led campaign, seven people joined The Red & Black Society this year. Fifty-three people increased their gifts, and 46 people gave a gift for the first time. "I think the best part of working on the Reunion Gift Campaign this year was the chance to talk to people I haven't seen in 10 years," said Elizabeth. "So much has changed for people in that time, and I really enjoyed catching up."

The Class of 1991 is a class on the rise.

Halliburton Tower

Halliburton Tower, provided by Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Halliburton in memory of their son, writer and adventurer Richard Halliburton, is the focal point of the Rhodes campus. The 40th anniversary of the Tower will be observed in 2002.

Give your granddaughter a gift far more valuable than a string of pearls.

Many graduates say that nothing enriched their lives more than their Rhodes education. With a planned gift to Rhodes, you can ensure that Rhodes will do the same for your granddaughter's generation.

A charitable gift annuity is a smart way to offset the cost of your gift to Rhodes. It can be a way to increase income for you and it is a proven technique for minimizing federal income taxes. A charitable gift annuity offers four distinct advantages:

▲ INCOME FOR LIFE — at a rate that may well exceed what you are currently receiving from the asset you transfer.

Age: 75	Rate: 7.9%	Age: 85	10.4%
80	Rate: 8.9%	90+	12.0%

▲ TAX SAVINGS — approximately 1/2 of the value of the asset you transfer will be tax deductible as a charitable contribution.

▲ TAX-FREE INCOME — if you contribute cash or have sufficient cost basis in the stock you transfer, you will receive tax-free income. If you are interested in tax-free payments, this is a good time to establish a gift annuity because IRS discount rates are low.

▲ PERSONAL SATISFACTION — from making a gift of significance to the college and making learning your legacy, for your family and many families to come.
