Get Ready for Early Homecoming Full Program Planned for Oct. 11

"Hank" Springer and Mrs. Wiley Floyd, presidents of the Southwestern Men of Memphis and Southwestern Women of Memphis respectively, confer on plans for Homecoming.

Homecoming is early this year — Saturday, October 11.

There's no other occasion with quite the college flavor that Homecoming affords. Three hundred and sixty-four days of the year the campus is a place—a beautiful place to be sure—a place where memories and traditions linger but, to returning alumni, sometimes a place with a lonely feel—a place where new generations with crew cuts and flat heeled shoes have supplanted their associates.

On Homecoming—the 365th day—the campus is suddenly transformed into the living community where you spent your college days. For your friends have "come home," too, to greet you. Your former professors turn out to welcome you. The student body furnishes the rich stuff of the spirit which makes the big difference between a place and a living thing—the night of frenzied, secret decorating for the lawn competition—the climax of freshman hazing activities—the exuberant loyalty to the Lynx team in one of the biggest games of the year—the shining pride in fraternity houses which have just had spit and polish treatment in preparation for visits from old grads . . . all these now forgotten phases of college life that consumed YOU a few years back.

There's a full and varied day of activity planned with numerous appeals.

First you'll want to visit fraternity and sorority rows to see the clever lawn decorations which seem to get more original and amusing each year. The students' enthusiasm is unbounded and it is necessary to have strict rules governing the competition so expenses and elaboration won't get out of hand.

William Dorr, '51, Southwestern Alumni Association vice-president in charge of reunions, heads the competition and will name prominent local judges. Awards will be presented to winners by Oscar Hurt, Jr., '29, alumni president.

Homecoming luncheon at 12:30 in Catherine Burrow Dining Hall in jointly sponsored by the Southwestern Men (and Women) of Memphis. The women's organization, headed by Mrs. Wiley E. Floyd (Mavalene Fondren, '46) furnishes the festive football decorations and plans the menu. The men, headed by Henry (Hank) Springer, '49, present the luncheon program—and it's always a good one.

The Centre College-Lynx game at 2 p.m. on Fargason Field promises an afternoon of first-rate football, followed by open house at all the fraternity lodges.

Contemporaries of the bop, the Big Apple, and the Charleston eras join congenial forces for the gala Alumni-Student Homecoming Ball from 8 p.m. until midnight in the Malory Gymnasium.

You'll enjoy Homecoming to the fullest if you get a group of your classmates and

Catherine Burrow Hall Dedication Planned

Catherine Burrow Hall, in use since last fall as a refectory, will be formally dedicated on Thursday, Oct. 16, when Southwestern's Board of Directors will be on the campus for its fall meeting.

Two members of the board, A. K. Burrow of Memphis and Mrs. Vance M. Higbee of New Orleans, were among the contributors who made the new building possible. Two more, Dr. John S. Land of New Orleans and Dr. W. J. Millard of Memphis, will participate in the simple, dignified dedicatory service in the new building at 3:30 p.m. Dr. Land will give the invocation and Dr. Millard the dedicatory prayer.

Dr. Peyton N. Rhodes, president, will make a brief address and an informal reception for the board members, faculty, students, and friends of the college will follow.

Especially honored on this occasion will be those to whose generosity the college is indebted for the beautiful new building. They are Mr. and Mrs. Burrow, Douglas Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Dixon, all of Memphis, Mr. and Mrs. Higbee of New Orleans, the Kresge Foundation of Detroit and the David Warner Foundation of Tuscaloosa, Ala.

The new private dining room in the west end of the building has been named in honor of Mr. Brooks.

Handsome bronze tablets have been installed in the building honoring the donors. (See page 7.)

Something New Is Added Reader's Comments Invited

The Southwestern News is happy to announce a new feature, beginning in this issue, designed to keep alumni informed on the thinky aspects of campus news.

Dr. Alfred O. Canon, '44, your dean, will put together in each issue news and views "From The Ivy Covered Tower," with occasional book reviews and other comments from your former professors.

This is one of many services to alumni which Dr. Canon has instituted during his two years in this post. Read Dr. Canon, pages 5 and 6. If you like the idea of this new section, if you have any questions you'd like for him to answer or ideas you want him to explore, let your own dean hear from you.

Yours is the only college anywhere, it is believed, that has a dean of alumni.

friends together and make a day of it.

Goodbar Morgan, alumni secretary, urges that you write or call the Alumni Office for luncheon reservations. Game and dance tickets can be purchased at the gate.

Five New Faculty Faces at Southwestern -- One is Visiting Professor

A distinguished scholar enriches the Southwestern scene this year as a John Hay Whitney Foundation visiting professor and four new regular faculty members have been added.

Dr. Emerson H. Swift of Princeton, N.J., retired professor of fine arts at Columbia University, teaches history of art and classical studies and participates in the Man Course which presents the story of man in the light of history and religion.

When he graduated from Williams College, Williamstown, Mass., in 1912, he was awarded the Williams College Greek Fellowship which provided for his first year of study at the American School in Athens. Appointed Fellow of the Archaeological Institute of America in 1913, he not only continued his excavation work in Greece and traveled widely among the Greek islands and in Asia Minor, but he also worked for some months at the American Academy, Rome, on a problem in Roman imperial portrait sculpture, and later produced a series of articles for the American Journal of Archaeology and eventually his doctoral dissertation. During this period, Dr. Swift studied in most of the great museums of Europe.

At Princeton he received his M.A. degree in classics and later a Ph.D. in art, archaeology, and classics. He taught at Amherst, the University of Chicago, and the University of Michigan. He then returned to Greece and on to Constantinople to study Justinian's great church of Hagia Sophia. This study resulted in articles in the American Journal of Archaeology and the Art Bulletin.

From Columbia

In 1926 he went to Columbia where he remained until his retirement in June, 1957. He was invited to deliver a series of lectures on Byzantine architecture in 1946 at the Dumbarton Oaks Research Library and Institute in Washington, D.C. He has also held the Mathews Lectureship three times for series of public lectures on medieval architecture at the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art.

In addition to many articles in professional journals, in the Columbia Encyclopedia, and in the Encyclopedia Americana, he is the author of "Arte, Civilizacion Y Ambiente," "Hagia Sophia," and "Roman Sources of Christian Art."

Since his retirement, Dr. Swift has studied the arts and cultures of prehistoric Mexico. In the spring of 1956, he and his wife visited the sacred cities and ruins of prehistoric Mexico and Yucatan.

He received the honorary degree of Litt. D. from his alma mater, Williams College, this past June.

Adult Courses

Dr. Swift will present two courses in the Adult Education Center, one on "American Architecture" and the other on "Religious Art and Architecture." He will also be a speaker for the Center's Executive Leadership Institute.

Two of Southwestern's former professors have been appointed John Hay Whitney Foundation visiting professors after their formal retirement—Dr. Alexander P. Kelso, professor of philosophy, is at Converse College, Spartanburg, S. C., for a second year after a trip to England this past summer, and Dr. Robert Strickler, Greek professor, went to Bard College, Annandale-on-Hudson, N.Y.

The biology, physics, history, and philosophy departments have added four new names to the faculty role this fall, preserving the high faculty-student ratio.

Four New Professors

Dr. Robert Lewis Amy, former associate professor of biology at Susquehanna University, Selinsgrove, Pa., is associate professor of biology.

Professor Joseph J. Freymuth, Jr., former head of the physics department at Jacksonville State College, Jacksonville, Ala., is the new assistant professor of physics.

Professor Joseph M. Hemphill II, assistant professor of history, has been on the research staff of Colonial Williamsburg, Inc., of Williamsburg, Va., since 1952.

Dr. Fred W. Neal, associate professor of philosophy and religion at Mississippi State University since 1949, is the new associate professor of philosophy and religion.

Biology

Born and educated in Pennsylvania, Dr. Amy received his B.A. degree from Thiel College in Greenville. He received his M.S. degree in zoology from the University of Pittsburgh and his Ph.D. in biology from the University of Virginia in 1955. As the recipient of the National Science Foundation Travel Grant, he attended the II International Congress of Photobiology in Turin, Italy, in 1957, and now holds the Public Health Service Research Grant. He is married and is a member of the Methodist Church.

Physics

Professor Freymuth received his B.S. and M.S. degrees in physics from Oklahoma A & M College (now Oklahoma State University) in Stillwater. After graduation from college, he joined the Research Laboratory of Stanolind Oil and Gas Company, Tulsa, as a junior research engineer. In 1952 he became an associate engineer with Douglas Aircraft Company. He returned to Oklahoma A & M as a physics instructor in 1955 on a one year assignment.

History

Professor Hemphill, a native of Baltimore, Md., received his B.A. degree from The Johns Hopkins University and his M.A. in history from Princeton University, taught history at Princeton and at the College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va., and served in the navy during World War II. He is married and has one child.

Philosophy

Dr. Neal received his B.A. degree from Albany College (now Lewis and Clark College, Portland, Oregon), his B.D. degree from the Chicago Theological Seminary, and his Ph.D. in church history from the University of Chicago. He also did post-doctorate study at Yale University. From 1943 until 1949 he was instructor in divinity and later assistant professor and Dean of Students at the University of Chicago's Divinity School. A navy chaplain during World War II and now a chaplain in the naval reserve, Dr. Neal is married and has two young daughters.

Southwestern Has Four New Board Members

Mr. Howell

Mr. Metcalf

Mr. Shotwell

Mr. Wilds

The Southwestern board of directors has four new members, and John M. McMillan of Stockton, Ala., has been re-elected for another four year term.

New members are Alden T. Shotwell of Monroe, La.; Orrick Metcalf of Natchez, Miss.; the Rev. Murphey C. Wilds of Oxford, Miss.; and Morton B. Howell, Jr. of Nashville.

Mr. Shotwell, a corporation lawyer, is a member of the American Bar Association, the Louisiana State Bar Association, and the Fourth Judicial District Bar Association.

Mr. Metcalf, a graduate of Swarthmore College, is an active Presbyterian layman, has served three years as Southern representative on the Swarthmore Alumni Council, is president of the Britton & Koontz National Bank and the Jordan Auto Co. of Natchez, and is past president of both the Natchez Rotary Club and Association of Commerce.

Mr. Wilds attended Clemson College, Davidson College, and Union Theological Seminary in Virginia. He is Presbytery chairman of Christian Education, Synod chairman of the Youth Work Committee and a member of the Synod's Christian Education Committee. He held pastorates at Coolemeemee and High Point, N.C., and Senatobia, Miss., before going to the First Presbyterian Church of Oxford.

Mr. Howell, a Nashville attorney, is a graduate of Vanderbilt and Yale University Law School and a Phi Beta Kappa. He is a member of the boards of the Tennessee Children's Home Society and Family and Children's Service and a trustee of Montgomery Bell Academy.

Library Memorials Afford Purchases Of Books and Research Materials

Albert M. Johnson, '30, librarian, announced that during the past fiscal year 318 memorial gifts to Burrow Library have furnished a total of $1,642.07 for the purchase of new books.

More and more alumni are using this method of giving in varying amounts. Mr. Johnson said contributions range from two or three dollars to substantial sums for the purchase of designated sets of books.

"The national trend now," he notes, "seems to be for numerous small donors to replace the single wealthy donor of earlier days."

Upon receipt of a memorial, a handsomely engraved card with the college seal in gold, red, and black, is sent to the family of the person in whose memory the gift is made. A complete list of all memorial gifts is being carefully preserved and will be eventually entered in a book of memorials displayed in the library.

The Library Memorial Fund, which was begun as an effort to secure a new library building," recalls Mr. Johnson, "has since the gift of the building by Mr. and Mrs. Burrow been used to supplement the library book fund.

"The price of books has risen astronomically and the additional funds gained from memorials permit the purchase of research materials which might otherwise be unobtainable.

"Donors who so choose may specify certain titles which they wish to purchase and in such cases the books selected will contain book plates with the names of the persons memorialized and the donors."

It is indeed a lasting memorial, one with particular appeal to book lovers, to those who are education-conscious, and especially, to alumni. These contributions are, of course, tax exempt.

This handsome engraved card announces the receipt of a memorial gift to Burrow Library.

NOW IS THE TIME

Students who are interested in entering Southwestern as freshmen next fall should make their applications now, says Malcolm Evans, registrar.

Each year the demand for residence hall space becomes critical. Frequently alumni of the college who don't realize the necessity for early application are disappointed when their sons, daughters, or friends apply too late.

Naturally, says Mr. Evans, the college likes to cater first to its alumni and friends. So he issues this advice. Apply early.

Veteran Coach Joins Lynx

Floyd "Preacher" Roberts, veteran Prep League coach, was named assistant to Head Coach Rick Mays just before the Lynx reported for daily practice Sept. 1.

Roberts last year coached the Memphis Navy team at Millington. This followed six years each at Messick and Tech.

"It's a wonderful thing that we can add Preacher to our staff," says Rick Mays. "He has a world of experience and can coach anywhere."

The Lynx line will be his responsibility.

Coach Roberts attended Sigler, Okla., High and starred at halfback at Tulane. He began his coaching career at Helena, Ark.

It Would Take A Book To Tell

All "This Girl" Has Done for College

"Let's ask Erma."

If someone would offer a cash reward to the college for every time this suggestion solves a dilemma, Southwestern would be well endowed indeed.

Actually, Erma Reese herself is a rich endowment—a walking encyclopedia of Southwestern—a cool-thinking, effectively-working executive who wastes nobody's time but gives infinitely of her own in her dedication to a job which has almost infinite ramifications.

But nobody "asked Erma" about this story. And nobody would have dared to instigate it except President Emeritus, Dr. Charles E. Diehl, in whose office Erma "grew up." For her genuine aversion to public recognition and acclaim is widely recognized and respected in the college community.

After a recent story in the Southwestern News about college engineer, John Rollow, '26, his long association and indispensable service to the college, Dr. Diehl telephoned the News office.

"There's got to be a sequel to that story," he said. "One on Erma Reese. These two were my mainstays during those difficult, early years of Southwestern at Memphis. We just couldn't have made it without either one of them."

But, Dr. Diehl, we countered. We know that's true but Erma is always so reluctant about the mere mention of her name in a news story. She would never forgive . . .

Now those who know these two long time associates well know that Dr. Diehl is not easily cowed—nor is he lightly turned from a fixed objective. And Erma Reese, who has been his secretary for more than 30 years, is very hard to pry loose from an entrenched position.

So this caught us, editorially speaking, right between an irresistible force and an immovable object—a most unhappy situation. We went over to see Dr. Diehl, half-hoping to dissuade him, but came away committed.

There was Dr. Diehl in his book-littered, memory-lined office—a picture on the shelf of him with John Rollow and Erma Reese made at the time of his retirement—pleasantly prepared to pay tribute to "this girl" who has been aid-de-camp to him during his college administration in Memphis and voluntary factotum since his retirement.

"You know," he smiled, "when Dr. Rhodes became president he asked Erma if she would stay on as his secretary. She said she would on one condition—that she be allowed to take care of me, too. Every day she stops by here and reads and answers my mail for me, keeps account of my finances. Nothing is too much trouble for her. And her memory serves me as a ready reference source. Many times a week I pick up the phone and ask her for a date, a name, a place. She always remembers."

"This girl is one of the finest characters I have ever known. I would trust her with anything I own or know—and I would like to see the color of the hair of the man who could persuade her to divulge information that she thinks should not be told."

Dr. Diehl's reminiscences carried him back to Clarksville, Tenn., in the days immediately preceding the college's move to Memphis.

"You know how I came to know this girl? A high school teacher friend of ours in Clarksville called me on the phone one day and said she had a very exceptional graduate to recommend if we needed anyone to work in the college office. So Erma came to work—16 years old. She sat on a high stool, a little scared at first, but right from the start showed very special aptitudes and energy, along with rare natural dignity and poise. And over the years she has absorbed a better education than some of our students who go out with degrees.

"Her father died before I knew her, but she has a wonderful mother who moved to Memphis with her and still lives here."

We couldn't resist asking Dr. Diehl if he had ever seen Erma lose her temper. He chuckled, "She's never actually told anyone to go to hell but particular pests can sometimes infer from the look in her eye that it would suit her for them to proceed in that direction."

As we said, we came away committed, but began suffering grave misgivings before we got across the street and ran frightened to Erma's Other Boss, Dr. Peyton N. Rhodes.

He was frankly scared, too. "She doesn't like this sort of thing at all," he said, confirming our worst fears. "She has a fierce modesty. Of course, you could never do justice to Erma's virtues anyway. You might say that Remington Rand has Univac and we have Erma—she knows everything and can do anything—but she will be genuinely embarrassed."

"You know, it's a strange thing," he observed, "that many students go all through college and never know Erma Reese or realize the part she plays in their college careers. Yet I believe she remembers at least the name of every student who's ever gone here."

"They aren't aware of what she does for them. Someone remarked last May, 'Without Erma graduation couldn't happen.' This is also true of many other events and projects. She keeps up with everything and everybody. You might say she's the college's human encyclopedia. She is super-efficient and deadly accurate but yet she has a heart big enough to embrace the whole campus. No telling how many negro employees she makes out income tax returns for—or how many other friends she quietly helps in various ways. Several are able to collect social security because Erma bothered to help them get their birth certificates. Many destitute families are helped at Christmas because she learns somehow of their needs."

"I'm glad Erma has many more years here before time to think of retirement—and that she will well outlast my administration and be on hand to break in the next victim. If he doesn't listen to her, they picked the wrong man. By that time she really will have stacked up a very remarkable record of service, having started so young."

Dr. Rhodes also pointed out that the Board of Directors, because of their confidence in her, because of the clear, exact, terse minutes of board and executive committee meetings which she has prepared over the years forming an official history of the administration of the college, last year elected her its Assistant Secretary and also gave her the title of Executive Secretary to the President.

"But this story thing," he went on, "I don't know what to say about that. She isn't going to like it."

No, we agreed, and Dr. Diehl isn't going to like it if we don't.

We're still scared.

Dr. Diehl was photographed at his retirement with Erma Reese and John Rollow.

From the Ivy-Covered Tower

By Alfred O. Canon, '44, Dean of Alumni

Whether you are an alumnus of the class of 1933 or 1937, there have been important changes taking place on the Southwestern campus since you were here. Practically all of you know about the splendid physical additions to the campus such as the Burrow Library, Mallory Memorial Gymnasium, Ellett Hall for men, Voorhies Hall and Freshman Hall for women, and the Catherine Burrow Refectory, which was opened in the fall of 1957.

Behind the ivy-covered Gothic walls, however, even more significant but less dramatic changes are taking place as new courses are added, more effective teaching techniques developed, and important areas of research explored or expanded. New literature in a field is published, curriculum changes of a rather sweeping nature are made, and teaching and research equipment is secured for the laboratories.

During the subsequent issues of the alumni News, we shall attempt in this column to inform you of some of these developments and to bring you up-to-date on the exciting events which are taking place in the classrooms and laboratories of your alma mater.

DEPARTMENT OF PHYSICS

The majority of you who studied physics at Southwestern did so under Professor Peyton N. Rhodes, who was chairman of this department from 1926 to 1949. During World War II, when an Air Force training detachment was stationed at the college, the department was enlarged with both temporary and fulltime staff members to handle the greatly increased classes.

In 1946-47, Jack Howard Taylor, '44, returned from the Navy to teach for one year before leaving to begin graduate work at The Johns Hopkins University. In the period from 1949 to 1956, several men came into the department for short periods of time, including Julian C. Nall, '43, who has recently received a Ph.D. in physics from Vanderbilt University.

During this period there was little continuity in the teaching staff and few improvements of a major nature made. Little equipment was purchased and much of the equipment bought after the move from Clarks-ville or secured during World War II suffered from the constant use to which it was of necessity put.

In 1956, Jack Taylor, then a consultant in infrared to the Optics Division of the Naval Research Laboratory in Washington, D.C., was invited by President Rhodes to return to Southwestern to head the physics department. Dr. Taylor was reluctant to leave an important research field, but agreed to accept the challenge of this new position. At the time of his return to the campus, there were no physics majors graduating. In fact, not a single B.S. degree was awarded in June 1957!

During the two years that alumnus Taylor has been on the job several significant changes have been made. For example, if you walked through the halls of the Science Building today, as I did recently, you would notice that windows have been cut in the laboratory doors so that one can look in from the hall and observe the experiments in process.

In addition to a general house-cleaning and the generous use of light colored paint, the old out-moded lights in the laboratories have been replaced by modern fluorescent lights. (You can now read a meter accurately without a flashlight or cigarette lighter!)

The greatest physical change has taken place in the basement of Science Hall where space has been found to locate a General Physics Laboratory, Electronics Laboratory, Optics Laboratory, and an Instrument Shop. The latter is particularly interesting as an added feature of the Southwestern Research Institute under the direction of Mr. Gardner Ruffin. There is a modestly equipped machine shop with major pieces of equipment being secured as money becomes available.

The most recent development has been the establishment of the new Spectroscopy Laboratory in Room 104. This air-conditioned and humidity-controlled facility houses the department's newly acquired infrared spectrometer. This highly important instrument will be an invaluable tool for teaching and basic research. With other delicate and expensive instruments which will soon be available to the department on a loan basis from the USAF, Southwestern's physics students will enjoy the use of equipment which is not ordinarily available to science students in the Memphis area.

These striking physical changes have been accompanied by a significant increase in enrollment: since 1956 there has been a 100% increase in students taking the General Physics course and an 800% increase in those taking advanced courses. As a result of this enrollment pressure, a new faculty member, Professor Joe J. Freymuth has been added to the department.

The results of the increased enrollment and renewed interest in physics are already evident. In the June 1958 class Ed Dorman graduated with honors and went on to The Johns Hopkins University to work toward a Ph.D. in physics. There will be three physics majors in the 1959 class and it is anticipated that each will go on to graduate work and eventually to teaching or research in this field.

SOUTHWESTERN RESEARCH INSTITUTE

At some point in the not too distant future your physician may prescribe a drug for you which was originally synthesized in the laboratories of the Southwestern Research Institute. It is possible that the results of some of the research at the Institute may reach you in some form of plastic material, as the Institute is engaged in the development of a basic material which may find use in the plastic industry. Other projects under way at the Institute deal with paint removers, corrosion and selenium rectifiers. Projects planned for the near future include infrared studies of atmospheric transmission, research in the fields of insecticides, biochemistry and radio-activity.

In addition to Dr. Raymond E. Vaughn, acting director of the Institute, Dr. Jack H. Taylor, and Dr. C. Scudder Smith, actively engaged in research, another experienced industrial chemist has been invited to join the Institute staff. In addition to doing this research, he will be available to teach courses in analytical chemistry. Other members of the Institute staff are Miss Lois Hegwood and Mr. Dale Jamison, chemists, and Mr. Gardner Ruffin in charge of instrument design and repair.

The Institute was established less than a year ago to promote industrial progress in the Mid-South through sponsored research and at the same time promote scientific education providing the incentive and opportunity for Southwestern faculty members and Southwestern science students to actively participate in research, both fundamental and applied. Members of the departments of chemistry, mathematics, and physics are related to the Institute on a consultant basis.

Members of the Institute staff not only invite you but request that you come by the next time you are on the campus and see for yourself how Southwestern is meeting the challenge recently brought to focus by the "sputniks."

CURRICULUM CHANGES

The Associate in Christian Education Program

In response to an increasing shortage of qualified directors of Christian education in our churches and as a direct result of an urgent appeal presented by a churchwide study committee to the 1957 General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, Southwestern has inaugurated a new program in this field which will be under the direction of Dr. W. Taylor Reveley, professor of Bible and Christian Education.

By majoring in Bible and Christian Education, a Southwestern graduate is prepared for immediate entrance into the work of a church as a certified "Associate in Christian Education." An "Associate" then qualifies as a "Director of Christian Education" either by adding three years of successful experience or by taking an appropriate master's degree.

Requirements for this major in Bible and Christian Education include the following courses (in addition to the regular degree requirements): The Literature of the Old and New Testaments (a tutorial), Christian Education (a two semester study of the basic aims, principles, and methods of Christian Education), Introduction to, and History of Philosophy, General Psychology, Educational Psychology, and either Child or Adolescent Psychology. The student must also engage in supervised field work during two semesters.

This important program is being financed over an initial five year period by matching funds from the Division of Higher Education of the Board of Christian Education and from the three Synods of Alabama, Louisiana, and Tennessee.

The Southwestern International Language Center

If any of you local alumni are anxious to continue your education in the area of foreign languages, there is a wonderful opportunity awaiting you at the newly established International Language Center which is on the balcony level of Neely Mallory Memorial Gymnasium. This Center, which is open from 3:00 P.M. to 9:00 P.M. daily, throughout the academic year (3-5:00 P.M. on Saturdays), is offering the following services designed for several purposes:

1. Night classes Monday through Thursday in beginning French, German, Italian, Russian or Spanish and classes in intermediate French and Spanish.
2. Special Classes in English (Monday and Wednesday evenings) and American Studies (Friday evenings) for foreigners.
3. Classes for children (ages 9-11) in French (Monday and Wednesday afternoons) and Spanish (Tuesday and Thursday afternoons).
4. A seminar in the teaching of Spanish for high school teachers.
5. Tapes (which may be used in a private booth at the Center or taken home) on Chinese, Danish, Dutch, French, Modern Greek, Modern Hebrew, Hindustani, Italian, Japanese, Portuguese, Russian, Spanish, and Turkish. Businessmen who travel abroad or anyone who travels for pleasure may wish to learn one of these languages from scratch or just brush up on a long unused tongue. Special tape recording equipment enables you to listen to the teacher, speak the practice phrases, and then play back the master voice and your own for comparison.

Specific details on all of these classes may be obtained by calling Dr. J. O. Embry at the college (BR 8-1800).

Mathematics

Southwestern gets two different types of students with regards to mathematical needs, the student who wants a grounding in the liberal arts but who has no particular need of or interest in mathematics, and the student whose interests require him to have a considerable knowledge of mathematics either as a tool or as an independent discipline. In order to provide adequately for these two types of students the mathematics department is setting up a two-track program along the following lines: A basic one-semester orientation course will be required of first semester freshmen electing mathematics (well qualified prospective mathematics and science majors may be excepted). This course will treat topics in set-theory, logic, probability as well as offer a general overview and cultural perspective of mathematics. By the beginning of the second semester of the freshman year the student must decide, on the basis of need and interest, whether he is to take the terminal course or the technical course. The terminal course will run two or three semesters, and will attempt to acquaint students with some of the basic ideas in algebra, trigonometry, analytic geometry, calculus, and some of the mathematics used in the social sciences. This course will put emphasis on ideas rather than technical skill, though the attainment of a certain level of technical skill will be necessary. The terminal course is intended for those students who wish to know something of the contributions of mathematics to our culture, of the language and methods of mathematics is applicable.

The technical course, on the other hand, is aimed at equipping students with skill and understanding in basic mathematical methods so that they can use the subject in a professional capacity. Science majors, pre-engineers, prospective mathematics teachers, and mathematics majors will elect this track at the beginning of the second semester freshman year. This sequence consists of a four-hour course in integrated algebra and trigonometry, followed by a year course in integrated analytic geometry and calculus, and supplemented by several semesters from advanced courses selected according to need and interest.

The mathematics faculty at Southwestern feels that this new program will better fill the needs of its students and will do a job that the current program does not do. The common first semester course allows the student a semester to decide, with his teacher's guidance, which track to pursue. That first semester course has the advantage of presenting new and exciting mathematics of an elementary nature which requires little previous technical background. (That is not to imply that admission requirements will be lessened as a result, for the later semesters will use the knowledge the student gets from a thorough 2½ years or more of solid high school mathematics.) The advantage of separating at an early stage those students professionally interested in mathematics from those who only wish to know something of what it is all about, is that both groups will come nearer to getting something useful and interesting to them than in the old one-track program.

LECTURE SERIES

Two special series of lectures will be presented this year in the Adult Education Center in addition to the many other programs. The first will attempt to describe "The American Style," as it is revealed in literature, theology and religion, foreign policy, the contemporary social and political scene, law, architecture, and the fine arts. The group of distinguished lecturers will include Edward Weeks, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, John Baille, Scottish theologian, Harry Ashmore, Pulitzer prize winning editor of the Arkansas Gazette, John W. Wade, Dean of the Vanderbilt School of Law, Emerson Swift, Professor Emeritus of Columbia University and visiting John Hay Whitney Professor at Southwestern in 1958-59, and John Mason Brown, literary critic and writer, associated with the Saturday Review.

The second series known as the "University Lectures" will feature a group of outstanding faculty members from five or six of the well-known eastern universities. Alumni in the Memphis area of each of these institutions will be special guests at a dinner on the campus prior to the lecture. The opening lecture in the series will be given by Dr. George E. Kirk, Lecturer on Government at Harvard University and a member of the staff of the recently established Middle East Research Center at that institution. Coming to Memphis as the guest of the Harvard Club and Southwestern, Dr. Kirk will discuss some aspect of the Middle East situation.

Both of these lecture series are open to the public without charge. Alumni of Southwestern and their friends are cordially urged to attend and will be sent announcements prior to the events.

BURROW LIBRARY ADDS REFERENCE LIBRARIAN

Mrs. Jewel Gray Parker has joined the Burrow Library staff as reference librarian and will be available to answer reference questions, help with reading problems, and recommend readings, Albert M. Johnson, '30, librarian, announced recently.

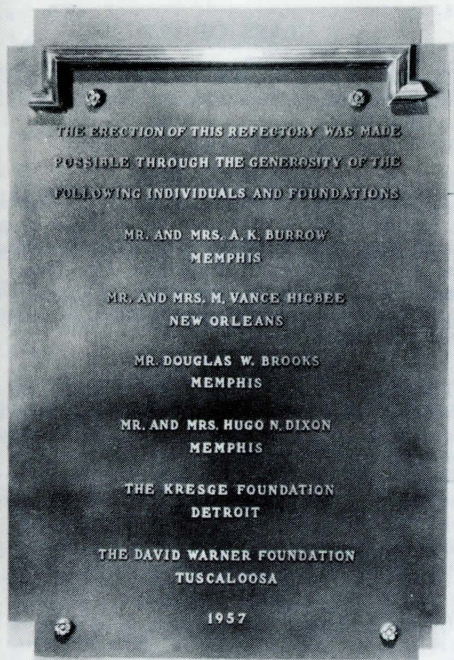

Her services, of course, are available to alumni as well as to students and faculty. Mr. Johnson says many alumni do not realize that the library facilities are open to the use of all alumni by the simple procedure of obtaining a card.

Mrs. Parker, who holds a master's degree in library science from George Peabody College in Nashville, has been librarian at Miss Hutchinson's School for the past 12 years.

Our Players Aren't "Stepping Stones" To Tomorrow—They're Heroes Today

By Rick Mays

This treatise on football should be properly entitled "The Glorious Present." Having played and coached football for a period of thirty-six years I have been disgusted many times with the "building for the future" philosophy in amateur sport. The future is certainly important and must be provided for with adequate and careful planning, but nothing is more important than the immediate task at hand in athletics, when game time approaches.

To be a football player who is a "stepping stone" to next year—a man who is called "a pretty-good-boy-but-wait-until-Joe-Doaks-is-eligible"—what a lousy spot to place a boy. He wants the future to be great, but the game next Saturday is his "baby" — not the one to be played two or three years hence.

1958 PROVES VINTAGE YEAR FOR INCOMING LYNX

When the freshman crop was gathered this year Rick Mays found he'd never had it so good. And in a month's time he and his able assistants have molded the neophytes well into a team already strong with its sprinkling of star-studded veterans. Sixteen new men answered the call to the first day of practice on Labor Day, all with fine records behind them and an eye on stardom with the Cardinal and Black.

Wes Busbee, a 170 pound end from Meridian, Miss., with one year of junior college under his belt, is the only new man who is not a freshman. Also seeking a berth as an end is Vernon "Buddy" Wise, a two year letterman from Memphis South Side.

Two hopeful candidates for tackle slots are Doug Newman and Charlie Landreth. Newman earned three high school monographs, two of them at Coronado, Calif., High School where he was captain in his junior year. He spent his senior year with Central High of Millington, Tenn. Landreth is a 200 pounder who hails from Memphis Treadwell.

Guard prospects rank among the tops in several years. G. F. "Buddy" Tollison heads the list. "Buddy" was first string All Memphis in 1954 and gained honorable mention All State the same season. Also added to this is two years of service ball with the marines. Joining Tollison are Mike Rowland and Robbie Adams, both All Memphis selections. Rowland was co-captain of Treadwell's team while Adams was an outstanding lineman with three football letters to his credit at Memphis Central. Rounding out the candidates at guard are Bill Burge, a two year letterman from New Orleans, La., and Mike Truscott, a product of a British school in South America, who is taking his first crack at football, yankee style.

Three talented signal callers are working at the quarterback slot. Bob Echols did his quarterbacking at Memphis South Side where he won two letters and gained honorable mention All Memphis. Bob Gay displayed his wares at Memphis White Station, winning three letters in the process. The third man in the trio, Leon Russom, captained the Sunnysvale High School team of California. He now hails from North Little Rock, Ark.

Moving to another trio of high-steppers at halfback we find Pat Burke, Glen Hays, and Doug Weathersby. Pat is an All Cotton Boll Conference player from Ruleville High School, also a three letterman. Glen pulled

When a man reports for football at Southwestern, which he does willingly, he wants to be part of a worthwhile athletic experience.

It naturally follows that those of us who coach this boy have a solemn obligation to him to see to it that "right now" becomes important and that he is the most important part of it.

At Southwestern in the fall of 1958 we will have a football squad of some fifty men. This will not be a team of the future building to 1959—this will be the 1958 team—the most important team we have ever had.

Every man on the squad will be important, whether he is on the first or fourth team. He will come out for the team knowing that he will be playing in the biggest game played anywhere, when his team takes the field on Saturday. He will be well aware of the fact that "right now", the "Glorious Present" is the thing with which we are concerned and he is a big part of it.

When a coach tells me, "it will take me five years to build a team," my immediate reaction is: what about those poor suckers that play the first four years for you?

To hell with that! Let's go get'em right now, this Saturday. If football teaches nothing else, it should teach the immediate decision, immediate performance, immediate action, win now, today.

Any other attitude in amateur sport is the "built-in abibi," "the head-buried-in-the-sand-hopefully" approach.

Let us get out of the dreamy future and get down to the "right now" present in our approach to sports. This is the sort of training our young men need to face the life ahead of them.

a second string berth on All Memphis while picking up a couple of letters at Memphis Central. Rounding out the freshman members of the squad is Weathersby, a 5' 10" 150 pounder from Magnolia, Miss., High School.

With these fine prospects now playing for the Lynx a season of good spectator football is in store. So gather up the family and come on out to see the home games.

LOYALTY FUND NEEDS LAST QUARTER BOOST

How does the 1958 Loyalty Fund look?

Well, it depends on how you look at it.

In the Sept. 1 report, the optimist sees a happy increase in participation over this time last year. A total of 592 alumni had, by that date, paid tribute this year to their Alma Mater in the coin of the realm.

These same figures, however, fill the pessimist with apprehension and foreboding. For the total receipts, just over $10,000, are a little under last year's total on the same date. But even he would have to concede that the difference was not significant.

Southwestern alumni last year boosted their own place in the national alumni-giving picture from an embarrassing 11 percent participation to a more creditable 15½ percent. The national average is 20 percent.

Southwestern and its alumni have never contented themselves with being merely average in any respect.

They have set themselves a new and better goal for this year—30 percent participation and $30,000 in gifts. There is ample time and ample giving potential to reach both goals before the December 31 deadline.

Several mailings have gone out with envelopes enclosed for your convenience in making your pledge or mailing your check. But you don't have to have a special envelope to do it. You can do it the old, inconvenient way if you prefer—and contributions of any size are welcome. Some send a dollar, some a thousand. Either way, you help toward both goals.

Contributions need only to be addressed to Loyalty Fund, Alumni Office, Southwestern at Memphis, Memphis 12, Tenn.

Third Annual Parents' Day Set For November First

Southwestern's third annual Parent's Day will be held Saturday, November 1, Dr. R. P. Richardson, chairman of this popular event, has announced.

Generally the day will follow the very successful plan of the two former occasions, with parents coming to the campus early in the morning to spend a typical college day with their sons and daughters. They go to the classes of their choice, either with their children or to some other class which interests them, they meet faculty members and student friends of their children, have lunch, and attend the football game, which this year will be Southwestern versus Howard.

The luncheon will be held in Catherine Burrow Hall. Evening entertainment is also included in the program.

The new Parents' Committee, organized by Dr. Richardson last spring, will plan details for the day to make it as nearly as possible just what parents will enjoy.

The committee includes T. E. Welsh, chairman, Claude H. McCormick, Mrs. Ed Lipscomb, Mrs. J. B. Coleman, Dr. L. C. Templeton, Mrs. Ben R. Waller, E. B. LeMaster, and Mrs. John H. Quinn.
