Course Statement

Sociology may be defined as a general social science that addresses the intersection of numerous disciplines including philosophy, history, social-psychology, economics, political science and religious studies. Sociology’s generality is the discipline’s strength and weakness. Its generality is its strength in that it provides a theoretical and methodological grounding capable of supporting the study of most any topic pertaining to human existence, for human existence is always, already social and “the structure of social existence” is sociology’s primary focus. On the other hand, sociology’s generality has left the discipline with an unclear place in academia and society itself. Moreover, because the content of sociology concerns the everyday, taken-for-granted aspects of life, sociology is sometimes criticized for studying the “obvious.” The problem with the taken-for-granted aspects of life is that they are meaning producing and significant even when they are ignored or taken-for-granted. The primary challenge of sociology, therefore, is to develop a critical awareness of the taken-for-granted structure and content of our social existence in order to address the displaced (hidden) problems that otherwise would not receive intentional analysis and ameliorative action.

There are two primary objectives of this course, both of which are identified by our college’s new core curriculum: critical thinking and the ability to understand the “other.” These objectives will be pursued by studying the three classical theoretical orientations in sociology and then applying them to critically investigate a variety of social issues, including an issue you personally identify and focus on for your term research paper. In addition, you will learn fascinating theoretical perspectives and interesting research findings; and develop a basic understanding of sociology and social science. Perhaps more importantly, this course will contribute to the development of your own personal philosophy by helping you appropriate a new, powerful conceptual vocabulary.

Expectations

This class will be conducted as a discussion/lecture course. YOU MUST COMPLETE YOUR READINGS, and each class meeting will begin with a short response question you must complete to evidence your preparation. We will then launch into a discussion about the reading in relation to the day’s specific learning objectives. It should be clear, then, that preparation (reading) and participation (actively joining in class discussions) are absolutely crucial to the quality of outcomes in this class. For this reason, preparation, participation and class attendance is mandatory. Three unexcused absences will qualify you to receive an automatic “F” in this class.

There will be a two-phase term research paper involving a literature review (8-10 pages) and an analysis of your research question examined from one of sociology’s traditional paradigms (8-10 pages). Handouts will be provided intermittently to guide your completion of this assignment.
