Autumn Reflections

By President William E. Troutt

Fall is my favorite season at Rhodes. It brings the excitement of new beginnings, the pleasure of greeting returning faculty members and welcoming new ones.

It is always inspiring to hear how our students spent their summers. Three groups lived on campus this year—the Rhodes Service Scholars, the participants in the Rhodes St. Jude Summer Plus program and the Rhodes Institute for Regional Studies fellows. The St. Jude group had the opportunity to participate in groundbreaking research with world-renowned scientists. The Service Scholars' projects covered the gamut—from teaching English to Hispanic prison inmates and Sudanese immigrants to assisting with a day camp at the Stax Museum and working with seniors at the Hope and Healing Center. Institute fellows delved into everything from the role of the Memphis Sears building in the city's rise as a distribution hub to the relationship of soul music and civil rights.

Others went farther afield, participating in academic and service endeavors all over the globe. Some did language immersion in Ecuador, Russia or Spain, others participated in British Studies at Oxford and some traveled south to work in the Honduras service learning program.

I always look forward to getting acquainted with our first-year students, a process that will take a little longer this semester. The Class of 2008 is our largest ever, boosting the population of our student body to more than 1,600 for the first time in the history of this college. There was no sacrifice in quality for quantity. They bring most impressive academic and leadership credentials.

Rhodes students distinguish themselves in so many ways, and I believe they leave here not only wiser but with values that are stronger from being discussed, debated and defended. This dialogue is one of the supreme values of a liberal arts education. Most of our students also take advantage of opportunities to broaden their perspectives by engaging in community service. They (and you) tell me consistently that the combination of brilliant classroom teaching and outside-the-gate experience results in a life-changing education.

I believe that is true. Rhodes provides an educational experience like no other college or university I know of. Where is there a better college to develop both the head and the heart? This conviction steels my determination to ensure that every qualified student who wishes to attend this great college can do so. Reaching this goal is absolutely critical to our success in achieving the Rhodes Vision. If we only enroll those who can afford to attend, we cannot become the college we envision. If we become solely a college for the economically privileged, we can never claim success.

As I told our new students and faculty at Opening Convocation, I am confident that they could not have chosen a better college nor a better time to join us. With superbly talented and dedicated faculty and students, we have begun an extraordinary year, the beginning of a great journey into learning and life.

McCarthy Appointed Senior Smithsonian Fellow

Associate art professor David McCarthy is currently in residence as a senior fellow at the Smithsonian American Art Museum through November 2004. He is the recipient of the Sara Roby Fellowship in Twentieth Century American Realism that supports independent research at the museum. The collection forms an important part of the museum's 20th-century holdings.

McCarthy is drawing upon the extensive archival holdings of the museum as well as interviews, reviews and historical and theoretical writings to investigate American art depicting war-or considering its causes, justifications and consequences—in order to reflect upon the United States' experience as a world power in the last century. He plans to use his research for a new book titled Against Imperium: American Artists in an Age of Global Conflict. The book, he says, takes into consideration 65 years of comment and protest as artists confronted "the massive trauma of a world war, fear of nuclear annihilation, four decades of Cold War strife and the resurgence of United States interventionism in the years since the collapse of the Soviet Union." The book is in its formative stages, and to date no scholar has written a comprehensive history of antiwar art in the second half of the 20th century, according to McCarthy.

The awards from the Smithsonian Institution are based on merit, and applicants are evaluated on the quality of a proposed research project and its suitability to the museum's collections, facilities and programs. Academic standing, scholarly qualifications and experience also are considered.

The Smithsonian American Art Museum, located in Washington, DC, is home to the largest collection of American art spanning more than three centuries and including 19th-century landscape painting, American impressionism, 20th-century realism, New Deal works, photography and graphic, folk, Latino and African-American art. Fellows have access to a 100,000-volume library that specializes in American art, history and biography; the Smithsonian's National Portrait Gallery; research databases; and publications complementing the museum's exhibitions and educational programs.

McCarthy, who holds his B.A. degree from Gettysburg College and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Delaware, is a widely-published art historian who, according to a colleague, has "an invaluable grasp of modern art and architecture in general and of 20th-century American art in particular." McCarthy received Rhodes' highest faculty honor, the 2004 Clarence Day Dean's Award for Outstanding Research and Creative Activity.

McCarthy has published numerous essays and book reviews including an essay in Art Journal and a review in the Times Literary Supplement. He is author of The Nude in American Painting, 1950–1980 (1998) and Movements in Modern Art: Pop Art (2000). His latest book is H.C. Westermann at War: Art and Manhood in Cold War America to be released this year. Like Against Imperium: American Artists in an Age of Global Conflict, the book investigates American art in relation to armed conflict.

College Rankings

Again in the top tier of U.S. News & World Report's best U.S. liberal arts colleges, Rhodes this year tied for the spot with Gettysburg and Skidmore colleges.

Princeton Review rated Rhodes No. 20 in its "Class Discussions Encouraged" list.

Consumers Digest put Rhodes at 13 in its "Top 25 best Values for Private Colleges and Universities."

Programs Listed in CIC Exchange

For people seeking ideas about service learning, community-based research and civic engagement, the Council of Independent Colleges' (CIC) Effective Practices Exchange offers descriptions of successful initiatives undertaken on 47 campuses, including Rhodes. The exchange is a Web-based collection developed as part of CIC's Engaging Communities and Campuses program.

Three Rhodes programs—Service Scholars, St. Jude Summer Plus program and Institute for Regional Studies are prominently listed in the exchange. The Rhodes Institute for Regional Studies brings together a select group of students and faculty for eight weeks of summer research on regional community topics. The four-year Rhodes Service Scholars program educates and empowers student leaders to develop and implement communitybased programs that address specific community needs. Through a partnership with St. Jude Children's Research Hospital, Rhodes provides students with expanded summer opportunities for community-based research.

Favazza Receives 17th Annual Diehl Award

Joseph Favazza, associate professor of religious studies, is the 2004 recipient of the Charles E. Diehl Society Award for Outstanding Faculty Service given during Opening Convocation Aug. 25. The Diehl Award recognizes a person who has performed consistent, significant work that reflects an abiding commitment to the Rhodes ideal of service.

Favazza, who holds a B.A. degree from Saint Meinrad College and J.B., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from The Catholic University of Louvain, Belgium, joined Rhodes as an adjunct faculty member in January 1990 and was appointed as full-time assistant professor in the Department of Religious Studies in 1993. His areas of expertise/research include historical theology, Catholic studies, religion and ritual. Favazza writes for an international audience of students on the topic of reconciliation.

Along with the college chaplain and professor emeritis Michael McLean, Favazza established a service-learning initiative within the college's academic program.

Favazza also has taught in and served as director of the Search for Values in the Light of Western History and Religion program since 2000.

Also at the Rhodes Opening Convocation, Dr. Richard J. Light, the Walter H. Gale Professor of Education of the Kennedy School of Government and Graduate School of Education at Harvard, spoke on "How Students Can Make the Most of College." The convocation marked the official opening of Rhodes' 156th academic year.

French Honor Society Established

There have been French clubs at Rhodes through the years: Sans Souci, Le Club Français, Le Cercle Français. Today it's called Le Club Café. There is also a French table in the refectory where students and faculty meet on Thursday evenings to dine and speak exclusively en français. And last spring, the college established a chapter of the national French honor society, Pi Delta Phi.

The Rhodes chapter, Nu Nu (mais oui) inducted 14 French majors and minors in April. The society honors its members for outstanding scholarship in the French language and literature.

It also charges them to spread the word about the cultural contributions of the French-speaking world and encourage French cultural activities.

Sarah Crisler, assistant professor of French, is the Pi Delta Phi faculty adviser.

Bond Leads New Rhodes Division

Beverly Bond has been appointed vice president of the college's newlyformed Division of External Programs. In her role, Bond is responsible for designing and implementing strategies for engaging external constituents in furthering the Rhodes Vision. She will lead programs in admissions and financial aid, alumni, communications, community and government relations, development and the Meeman Center for Lifelong Learning. (Visit About Rhodes at rhodes. edu.)

"Much progress has been achieved through the commitment of our faculty and staff," President William E. Troutt said in announcing the reorganization to the Rhodes campus community. "Now we must look externally in new ways. The Division of External Programs will promote participation on the part of our current and future constituencies including alumni, parents, friends, prospective and current students and corporate and community partners. Activities will be focused on attracting and retaining students and sustaining their lifelong involvement with Rhodes. Building new community partnerships and enhancing existing ones will also be a priority. Beverly Bond brings broad experience and an appreciation of our values, and I am pleased that she has joined us."

Bond came to Rhodes from The George Washington University in Washington, DC, where she was vice president for advancement. Prior to that she had a 20-year career at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, ending as vice chancellor for alumni and development. She holds an M.B.A. from Vanderbilt University and a bachelor's degree from the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor.

"Rhodes is well-suited to provide the very finest educational experience any small, private liberal arts college can offer," she said. "The Rhodes Vision, particularly 'translating academic study and personal concern into effective action' is already being manifest in many powerful ways. It's a privilege to participate in the important work of Rhodes College at this exciting time."

Getty Grants Target Campus Preservation

Rhodes has received a $150,000 grant from the Getty Grant Program to study the adaptive reuse of several campus buildings and expand its listings in the National Register of Historic Places. Thirteen campus buildings are currently listed on the National Register. Getty has also funded the Council of Independent Colleges' (CIC) Survey of Historic Architecture and Design. Rhodes is one of more than 360 campuses participating in the survey.

In announcing the $150,000 grant to Rhodes, Deborah Marrow, director of The Getty Grant Program, said, "Since a large portion of this nation's distinguished architectural heritage is found on college and university campuses, it is extremely important to incorporate historic preservation into the campus master planning process. We are delighted by the results of this year's Campus Heritage initiative, and pleased that it includes the strong plan by Rhodes College to preserve its fine collegiate Gothic architecture."

President Troutt explains that the architectural style and consistency are important for two reasons: as a symbol of educational values and as an inspiration to students.

"Rhodes is a place where academic pursuit, integrity and service are symbiotic, and the beauty of the campus is integral to our students' undergraduate experience. We are very grateful to the Getty for recognizing the special nature of Rhodes and for providing resources to help us maintain it."

Since 2002, the Getty Grant Program has awarded more than $7 million to more than 50 colleges and universities in a nationwide effort to preserve historic buildings, sites and landscapes. The Campus Heritage Initiative has enabled educational institutions in 24 states to research and develop conservation plans to protect their campuses. Recipients include such colleges and universities as the University of Chicago, Bryn Mawr, Barnard and Scripps colleges and Brown and Columbia universities. Rhodes is one of 25 institutions to receive the prestigious award this year. The CIC Survey of Historic Architecture and Design will establish the first national architecture and landscape database of independent college campuses and will include 3,600 images of historical significance to the participating institutions. The database eventually will be turned into a Web-based image archive tool and gallery.

The historic places Rhodes submitted to the survey include the Rollow Avenue of Oaks (1925), Berthold S. Kennedy Hall (1925), Palmer Hall (1925), Hugh M. Neely Hall (1927) and Burrow Library (1951) as well as the Diehl Master Plan (1923), the original master plan for the campus created by then-President Charles E. Diehl and architects Charles Klauder and Henry Hibbs.

Founded in 1956, the Council of Independent Colleges is an association of 530 independent colleges and universities as well as higher education affiliates and organizations that work together to strengthen college and university leadership, sustain high-quality education and enhance private higher education's contributions to society. For further information, visit cic.edu.

The J. Paul Getty Trust is an international cultural and philanthropic institution devoted to the visual arts that includes the J. Paul Getty Museum, Getty Research Institute, Getty Conservation Institute and the Getty Grant Program. The Getty Trust and programs are based at the Getty Center in Los Angeles. #### Remembering Professor Betty Ruffin

Betty Ruffin, professor emerita of theatre and media arts, died June 8, 2004.

A highly respected performer and director, Prof. Ruffin joined the faculty in 1970 and was chair of the Theatre and Media Arts Department for several years. She kept the theatrical fires alive during the "underground" years when the campus theatre (known as Theatre 6) was housed in the basement of Palmer Hall. She retired from Rhodes in 1989, having seen the Theatre Department move in 1982 into the newly-created McCoy Theatre.

"I was privileged to study with Prof. Ruffin and adored her for her gentility and grace, her understanding and patience and her vast knowledge and experience," said John Rone'71, director of event planning at Rhodes and an acclaimed actor and director in Memphis theatre.

"She completely transformed the basement surroundings when she stood before her class," he said. "She had a regal bearing and beautiful diction, and one could learn simply from observing her. Her scholarship in the areas of stagecraft, theatre history and the elements of acting prepared students like me for an appreciation of the theatre, whether as spectators or participants. Her compassionate concern for the welfare of her students, both in class and out, put her in the company of those professors who make one's college years the experience of a lifetime."

Prof. Ruffin often joined in the campus Renaissance Festivals in the 1970s and was frequently asked to reign over events in the costume of Queen Elizabeth I. It was perfect casting for a larger-than-life teacher and role model.

"A Toast to Betty Ruffin," a tribute from alumni and friends, was held July 12 at McCoy Theatre.

Rhodes to Adventure

Among the Meeman Center for Lifelong Learning's 2005 offerings is a trip to the amber cities in central Europe scheduled June 9-23. The amber cities—Prague, Krakow, Warsaw, Vilnius, Riga and Tallinn—for centuries have been sources of prized Baltic amber, art and architecture. #### Rhodes Welcomes Record Class

"When Newsweek chose Rhodes as the college 'Most Likely to Succeed' on its list of 'The Hot Schools of 2004,' its words became prophetic for admissions," says Dave Wottle, dean of admissions and financial aid. This fall, the college geared up for a record 491 new (transfer, exchange and first-year) students. Out of this total, 474 first-year students make up the class of 2008. Members of the class, who come from as far as Germany and as close as midtown Memphis, have standout academic credentials and leadership experiences.

More than 31,000 inquires were made, and 3,591 applications were received for the 2004-05 academic year.

"We are excited and encouraged about the interest shown," says Wottle. "With a record number of students applying for admission and the largest class in Rhodes history enrolling this fall, there is obviously unprecedented interest in being a part of the Rhodes community."

Rhodes challenges its students to translate learning beyond the classroom into service and leadership, and members of the class of 2008 already have demonstrated these abilities, with 140 serving as president of at least one high school club or organization, 102 as captain of a varsity athletic team, 26 as a publication editor, 47 as a president or vice president of the student government or senior class, and 16 as president or vice president of the National Honor Society.

The students accepted for the class of 2008 show impressive academic talent with a mean high school grade point average of 3.66 on a 4.0 scale; the middle 50% range of SAT-I scores of 1200-1340; and the middle 50% range of ACT scores of 25 to 30. Out of the 51 percent ranking in the top 10 percent of their high school class, 21 were valedictorians and 11, salutatorians. In addition, 20 were National Merit or National Achievement Finalists/ Semi-Finalists.

As part of the Rhodes Vision, the college strives to attract and retain a talented, diverse student body, and members of the class of 2008 come from 36 states and three countries (Germany, Belgium and the United Kingdom). Minority students represent eight percent of the entering class.

"As we have continued to reach out to other parts of the country to tell the story of Rhodes, students have responded," says Wottle. "There is so much good happening at the college that it makes our jobs of encouraging interest much easier."

With the entering class, the total Rhodes enrollment is 1,633.

Stackman Named Dean of Students

William Stackman

Dr. William Stackman, former interim dean of students at Oberlin College, has been appointed dean of students at Rhodes. He has more than 20 years of experience in directing student activities, student and staff development, campus involvement and fiscal management. Stackman began his position in July. Dr. Bette Ackerman, who served as dean the last three years, has resumed her faculty position in the Department of Psychology.

Stackman, who was at Oberlin from 1997-2004, also has served as associate dean of students and dean for the class of 2006 there, which involved counseling students on academic, career and personal matters, facilitating interaction between students and their professors, recommending student scholarships and awards and advising the 2006 Class Council.

He also coordinated the establishment of Oberlin's Women's Resource Center and other initiatives at the college including a student leadership series, the annual student leadership program, a new student orientation program, a Dean on Call system and the Class Council. In addition, he coordinated various special events to enhance the spirit of community and taught a "Leadership: Theory and Practice" course in the sociology department.

Prior to joining the Oberlin administration, Stackman was director of the Student Union and Student Activities at Tufts University. He held similar positions at the University of Illinois, Urbana (1989-93), Temple University (1988-89) and Glenville State College (1983-88).

Stackman has a doctorate of education degree in administration, training and policy studies from Boston University; M.A. degree in education administration from West Virginia University; M.S. degree in recreation administration from the University of Missouri-Columbia; and a B.A. degree in education from the University of Kentucky.

Stackman and his wife Teri have two children, Laurel (8) and Reed (5).

"Rhodes is an outstanding liberal arts college that provides its students amazing educational opportunities," said Stackman. "The students are dynamic, inspiring, caring, talented and fun.

"It's very rewarding to be able to support students, see them change as a result of their experiences and be a part of their growth process. Helping to facilitate growth is very important to me, as is creating a sense of community on campus where all students feel welcome and where all of who they are is valued. I feel both honored and blessed to be a part of the Rhodes community."

Barr Wins State Art Commission Honor

The Tennessee Arts Commission has awarded creative writing professor Tina Barr a fiscal year 2005 Individual Artist Fellowship of $5,000. The fellowship is one of two awarded this year in the category of Literary Fellowships. Poetry Fellowships are given in alternate years.

The grant requires an application that includes anonymously submitted poems and a project description. Rich Boyd, executive director of the commission, describes the award as "one of the highest honors that can come to a Tennessee Artist." There are no restrictions placed on the expenditure of the award, which is to help the artist "continue creating and enriching the lives of all Tennesseans through [his or her] art."

Agilent Technologies Grants Microarray Kits

Agilent Technologies Inc. has granted Rhodes microarray kits valued at $150,000 to be used by students in the study of human diseases.

"Microarrays have become a cornerstone technology for the study of genetic information and are playing an important role in the advancement of biomedical research," said Prof. Gary Lindquester, chairman of the Rhodes Department of Biology. "When compared to large research universities, liberal arts colleges have relatively small laboratory and research budgets, but they graduate a disproportionately large number of the country's future biomedical researchers, health administrators and policy-makers. Gifts such as this provide our future research and health professionals with experiences that will inform and excite them about the latest tools in molecular research."

The Agilent microarrays will be used in problem-based exercises for genetics and molecular biology classes at Rhodes.

Commonly used in the research of cancer and other diseases, a microarray is based on a 1" x 3" glass slide printed with thousands of DNA probes, each of which corresponds to a unique gene. In any given type of cell, only 10 to 30 percent of genes are expressed, or active. Microarrays can be used to measure the activity of each expressed gene in a cell and compare the differences among diseased cells and their healthy counterparts.

Agilent Technologies Inc. is a global technology leader in communications, electronics, life sciences and chemical analysis. For more information, visit agilent.com.

rhodes.edu FALL 2004 · RHODES 7

arnegie Hall has held special meaning for Rhodes since 1935, the year music professor and composer Burnet C. Tuthill joined the faculty. He was the son of Carnegie Hall's architect and founder of the Southwestern (now Rhodes) Singers. "Papa Tut," as the students called him, was a clarinetist who also founded the group that was to become the Memphis Symphony Orchestra. The Tuthill Performance Hall in Hassell Hall bears his name.

Tuthill's successor, Prof. Tony Lee Garner '65, created the MasterSingers Chorale in the early 1990s, bringing together alumni and community singers.

Prof. Tim Sharp, conductor since 2000, upholds the unparalleled reputation of both groups with new distinction.

Sharp first met composer Morten Lauridsen, whose music has become some of the most popular classical choral music of the last 20 years, when the composer visited Rhodes as the Springfield Music Lecturer in fall 2002. That's when the Rhodes choral groups first began working with his music.

Lauridsen, a member of the faculty and former chair of the University of Southern California's Thornton School of Music, was composer-in-residence with the renowned Los Angeles Master Chorale from 1994-2001.

A few months before Lauridsen came to Rhodes, MidAmerica Productions in New York invited Sharp to conduct at Carnegie Hall. He could choose his music, choirs and conductors.

Sharp immediately settled on the music of Lauridsen and conductors whom he knew or with whom he had worked. The result: Lauridsen himself in residence in New York along with 59 Rhodes Singers, 60 MasterSingers, 184 members of choirs from Hawaii to West Virginia and the New England Symphonic Ensemble filling the stage of Carnegie Hall and afterward, receiving a standing ovation.

The Concert

The singers performed in the Isaac Stern Auditorium with its famous curvilinear, neo-classical design. The program, billed "The Choral Cycles of Morten Lauridsen," included five Mid-Winter Songs based on poems by Robert Graves, performed by the Rhodes Singers and accompanied by music Prof. David Ramsey '61; Madrigali: Six "Fire Songs" on Italian Renaissance Poems performed by the Rhodes MasterSingers Chorale; Les Chansons des Roses based on the poetry of Ranier Maria Rilke and performed by the Rhodes Singers with piano accompaniment by Lauridsen himself; and O Magnum Mysterium and Lux Aeterna performed by the 10 combined choirs accompanied by the New England Symphonic Ensemble.

The audience was rapturous in its response.

"People were moved by the music," said Marci Hendrix of Rhodes' Office of Information Services and a MasterSingers alto. "After the performance I heard words from the audience like 'overwhelming,' 'stunning' and 'foretaste of heaven."

For Rhodes graphic designer Larry Ahokas, a tenor with the MasterSingers, it was gratifying to "watch the people in the first few rows shaking their heads like, 'Wow!"

The music affected the singers as much as the audience.

"I've sung O Magnum Mysterium forever now, but every time we hit the climax I cry. It's just such a beautiful piece," said alto Rhodes Singer Eden Badgett '07.

"Anyone who hears that music loves it," said MasterSinger soprano Carole Choate Blankenship '85, who teaches voice at Rhodes. "It touches you like something you've heard before, something you can relate to in a romantic, classical way."

MasterSinger bass David Cooper '64 summed up his appreciation: "The Lux Aeterna and Magnum Mysterium are spiritual pieces. Lauridsen was very careful to tell us why he wrote them and of his own spiritual basis in composing them. I was impressed by that. I was moved, and I think we all were, that these were coming from his soul. It was his response to God living in him. You don't get that from everybody who writes music."

"I was so proud of them," Sharp said, "and Morten was just beaming afterward. He had never heard a choir that size sing his music. He heard a texture there he'd never heard before."

Lauridsen complimented Sharp and the choirs for their dynamics and phrase endings, which, he said, were as eloquent as those of any group who had performed his music.

"Lauridsen trusted us because he knew us. He felt at home with us," said David Ramsey. "It means an awful lot to a conductor to have heard a group perform your music well before."

It's true what they say about Carnegie Hall: With unparalleled acoustics and line of vision, there's not a bad seat in the house. You hear every voice, every word, every instrument separately, yet together.

It's also true what they say about the Rhodes Singers, MasterSingers and Tim Sharp: Their commitment to excellence and nearly perfect interpretation of Lauridsen's hauntingly beautiful music led Carnegie Hall personnel to remark that Rhodes had set a new standard there. On the monetary side, the Rhodes contingent's reputation preceded it, bringing in more than 2,000 advance ticket sales, many from New Yorkers, for the 2,800-seat hall.

Practice, Practice, Practice

The old joke says that's how you get to Carnegie Hall. The thing is, it's no joke. The Singers and MasterSingers worked on Lauridesn's music for almost two years, performing some of it in the Memphis area, then all of it at the city's new acoustic-rich Cannon Center a month before going to New York. In the Big Apple, there were three intense half-days of rehearsal before the Sunday afternoon performance.

The first rehearsal, held Friday before the Sunday afternoon performance, was at the Church of Our Savior, Park Avenue at 38th Street, a short walk from the Grand Hyatt where most of the singers stayed. The choirs rehearsed in groups. First up were the MasterSingers and their Madrigali, whose vibrant sounds could not be contained in the church's arched basement room deep beneath the streets of Manhattan. Hearing the music on the stairwell practically lifted you to the roof. Then came the full chorus; next, the Singers. Rehearsals continued at the hotel the next day. Sunday morning was the full-ensemble dress rehearsal at Carnegie Hall.

Everyone was prepared, thanks to months-long rehearsals and Sharp's careful marking of the score, which all 10 choirs had followed to the letter.

Yet it was Morten Lauridsen's presence in New York that inspired them to sing his works as never before.

A gentle, totally engaged and engaging presence at rehearsals, Lauridsen, make no mistake, meant business. Sitting at first, then leaning on a column in the church hall, then standing in front of the assembly, he would critique, instruct, nod when pleased with a particular phrase. He would confer with accompanist David Ramsey. Both wore leis presented them by members of one of the choirs, the Hawaii Pacific University International Vocal Ensemble. Lauridsen was particularly involved with the Singers, whom he personally accompanied on the piano. He would sing along with them, offer a high sign or nod assent when pleased with a particular phrase. At the end he made their day when he said with a heartfelt smile, "Nicely done."

The composer stayed at the singers' hotel, ate with them, gladly autographed everything they offered him, even went on their Sunday night dinner "cruise" around Manhattan. Dinner was served, countless toasts were made—all without leaving the dock. The boat had developed engine trouble, the only snag to the perfect week.

Outside the Hall

On Saturday, the day before their performance at Carnegie Hall, Sharp and members of the Singers and MasterSingers ventured to the subway station at Ground Zero, the site of the Sept. 11, 2001, World Trade Center attacks. There, they sang "O Nata Lux" (Born of Light) from Lauridsen's Lux Aeterna (Eternal Light):

O nata lux de lumine, Jesu redemptor saeculi, dignare clemens supplicum laudes preces que sumere.

Qui carne quondam dignatus es pro perditis. Nos membra confer effici, tui beati corporis. O born light of light, Jesus, redeemer of the world, mercifully deem worthy and accept the praises and prayers of your supplicants.

Thou who once deigned to be clothed in flesh for the sake of the lost ones, grant us to be made members of your holy body.

New Yorkers and tourists alike stopped to listen, many holding up their cell phones for friends and loved ones to hear and see.

The group engaged in other extracurricular singing around New York. At a Sunday night gettogether at one of Grand Central Terminal's balcony restaurants, members of the Singers and alumni MasterSingers burst forth with the Rhodes Alma Mater, again stopping traffic with the lush harmony that rolled across the marble hall.

Backstage at Carnegie Hall on Sunday, they sang it again just before going on.

Coming Home

When Tim Sharp returned to Memphis he found this e-mail waiting for him:

Dear Tim,

My ears are still ringing with the sounds of your glorious performances at Carnegie Hall. This truly was a concert that will be remembered for a long, long time to come.

Everyone who took part in the concert should feel a great deal of pride in performing these various pieces of mine so beautifully and with such understanding. The various conductors who prepared the choruses did an amazing job and I salute them for their dedication and musicality. And the people at MidAmerica were thoroughly professional; the organization throughout the stay in New York was fabulous.

But it was your own consummate artistry that led to such a high level of music making, Tim. Your conducting of these very challenging works was simply brilliant—I could not have asked for more accurate, sensitive and gorgeously realized interpretations of my music.

I thank you and all involved from the bottom of my heart. Please pass on my sentiments to the performers. I'm looking forward to seeing you all again in the future.

With deep appreciation and esteem,

Morten

Eden Badgett '07

With a bridge major in music and education, Eden Badgett is thinking of making a career of choral conducting at the high school or college level.

"Mr. Lauridsen makes me want to go into choral music," said the sophomore from Knoxville, TN. "The first time I ever sang his O Magnum Mysterium I thought, 'This is it. This is what I want to do.'"

Carole Choate Blankenship '85

Several Rhodes Singers take voice and have studied diction in the Romance languages. Carole Blankenship is one of the voice teachers who has worked with them. A Rhodes music major, Blankenship sings soprano with the MasterSingers.

Andrew Colyer '90

Andrew Colyer, who practices chiropractic and alternative medicine in Red Hook, NY, north of Manhattan, majored in music and pre-med and was a Singer at Rhodes. A story about the Carnegie Hall concert in the summer 2003 Rhodes magazine piqued his interest, especially the part that invited alumni to sing. He e-mailed conductor Tim Sharp, introduced himself, and was in.

Colyer, who sings bass, ordered the scores and CDs of the works and trained with a voice coach.

"I wanted to be really prepared for that performance," he said.

David and Elizabeth Cooper at Carnegie Hall

David '64 and Elizabeth Saunders Cooper '64

MasterSingers Elizabeth and David Cooper celebrated their 40th wedding anniversarythis year. After dress rehearsal at Carnegie Hall, Elizabeth asked Morten Lauridsen to sign an anniversary card for them, which he graciously did.

Another bonus: Although David, bass, and Elizabeth, alto, both sing in the Memphis Symphony Chorus and their church choir and David lends his voice to the chorus of Opera Memphis, the luck of the Carnegie Hall staging allowed them to sing side by side for the first time.

At Rhodes, David majored in biology, Elizabeth, in English. It must be love.

Morten Lauridsen

Lauridsen explains his approach to his art:

"My passion second to music is poetry. I read it constantly—every day. It is a fundamental part of my life. I have profound admiration for poets who seek deeper meanings and truths and are able to express themselves elegantly through the written word. Consequently, it has been a natural development for me as a composer to wed these two passions and to set texts to music."

David Ramsey '61

"There were certain spots in the Carnegie Hall concert in which I felt totally involved, that I was making a difference," said Distinguished Service Professor and accompanist David Ramsey. When the former Rhodes music major wasn't performing he was offstage taking in the rest of the program.

"The Madrigali was a knockout execution. There were a lot of glorious moments that shone through. One was the beginning of O Magnum Mysterium—the choral music that blended like the ethereal quality of a cello, then a violin, just out of nowhere. Carnegie Hall tends to magnify the subtle moments as well as the bright, vivacious ones."

Craig Cooper in rehearsal

Craig Cooper '05

"Carnegie Hall is beautiful. I think it's even more beautiful standing on the stage looking out. I really think it was designed with performers in mind," said Rhodes Singer and MasterSinger Craig Cooper, a political science major and religious studies minor.

The tenor from Thayer, MO, says, "When we performed I felt it was the best we had done. Mr. Lauridsen was extremely pleased with our performance. That was a good feeling to know that in his eyes we had done his music justice."

Tim Sharp

Conductor Tim Sharp, who holds the Elizabeth Gay Daughdrill Chair in the Fine Arts at Rhodes, said the concert held three attractions for him: 1. It was the first time he or the choirs had played Carnegie Hall. 2. The Tuthill connection was a full circle for Rhodes. 3. He had a unique program that he felt would interest New Yorkers and visitors alike.

Sharp is on sabbatical this year as a visiting fellow at Clare Hall, Cambridge University, where he is researching Moravian music. Tim Powell, a former student of Sharp who accompanied him and the singers to New York, is conducting at Rhodes this year as Sharp's sabbatical replacement.

Sharp has already been invited back to Carnegie Hall. In January 2006 he will conduct an all-male choir for the Martin Luther King Day celebration. He's already in the process of contacting conductors and choirs from around the country.

Rhodes Welcomes 23 Faculty

Stuart Allen, assistant professor of English, received his B.A. in English with honors from the University of Leeds, M.A. in 20th-century literature from the University of Sussex and Ph.D. in English from Wolfson College, Oxford. He served as lecturer to overseas students at Hertford College, Oxford. He also taught at Corpus Christi, University and Green colleges at Oxford. He has published numerous articles in his fields of interest including Wordsworth, aesthetics, Romanticism and Modernism.

Mauricio Cafiero, assistant professor of chemistry. A native of Lima, Peru, Cafiero received his B.S. in chemistry from the University of North Florida and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in chemistry from the University of Arizona. Prior to joining the Rhodes faculty, he worked as a post-doctoral fellow in the computational chemistry group at the National Institute of Standards and Technology. He has published several articles in his field of study and is currently preparing papers on non-Born-

Oppenheimer molecular structure, self-interaction corrected density functional theory, and the mechanism of oxidation of solid Cr2O3.

Rosanna Cappellato, assistant professor of biology, received her B.S. from the University of Rome, doctorandus in biology from the University of Amsterdam and Ph.D. in biology from Emory University. She has taught courses in environmental sciences at Allegheny College, Alfred University and Emory University. She has conducted field research in the U.S. and across the world and has also worked as an associate expert in ecology for the United Nations. She has co-authored articles in Water, Air and Soil Pollution, Journal of Hydrology and Canadian Journal of Forest Research.

Margaret Carne, assistant professor of political science, holds her B.A. in politics (high honors) from Oberlin College and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of California, Berkeley. Prior to joining the Rhodes faculty, she served as an instructor at UC-Berkeley, teaching courses in politics, ethics and leadership. A member of Phi Beta Kappa, her teaching interests include American politics, campaigns and elections, political parties and interest groups, public opinion and quantitative methods.

Winnie Chan, assistant professor of English, received her A.B. in English from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign and Ph.D. in English language and literature from the University of Virginia. She has served as an instructor at the University of Virginia, teaching courses in accelerated academic writing, studies in British literature and Shakespearian drama and advanced expository writing. Her teaching and research interests include Victorian literary and cultural studies, modernism, colonial and postcolonial studies, humanities computing, composition, textual studies and the history of the book and women's studies.

John Chesley, instructor, Greek and Roman Studies, received his B.A. in classics from the University of Wisconsin, Madison and M.A. from the University of Washington, Seattle. He has served as an instructor at the University of Washington, teaching courses in Greek and Latin, Homer and Greek and Roman mythology. He currently is taking part in the Tel-Dor Archaeological Project. His research interests include Latin and Greek historiography, Roman social history and topography of Greece and Rome.

Ellen Daugherty, assistant professor of art, received her B.A. (highest distinction) in art history with a minor in architectural history from the University of Virginia and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in art history and American art from the University of Virginia. A recipient of the Luce/ACLS Fellowship in American Art, she has recently presented papers on "Refiguring African-American Public Memory: The Monuments of Lincoln Park, Washington, DC" and "The Booker T. Washington Monument at Tuskegee University and the Imagery of Racial Uplift."

Anna Dronzek, assistant professor of history, holds her B.A. in history (cum laude with highest honors) from Williams College and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in medieval and early modern European history from the University of Minnesota-Twin Cities. She has served as assistant professor of history at the University of Minnesota-Morris, teaching courses in world history, medieval Europe and women in the Middle Ages. The recipient of numerous fellowships and grants, she has published articles on gender roles in the 15th century, and is currently at work on a book manuscript, To Win Worship: Middle Class Identity and Gender in Late Medieval England.

Regina Gee, assistant professor of art, received B.A. and M.A. degrees from Vanderbilt University and her Ph.D. in Roman art and architecture from the University of Texas. She has served as visiting associate professor of art history at Millsaps College, teaching courses in Roman, Baroque, Minoan and Italian Renaissance art and architecture, realism and impressionism and modernism. A Fulbright Scholar, she is currently at work on a paper titled "Being Greek in Rome: The Tomb of Gaius Valerius Herma in the Vatican Necropolis."

Ron Gelleny rejoins the Department of International Studies as assistant professor. A former visiting assistant professor at Rhodes, Gelleny received his B.A. in economics and B.A. and M.A. in political science from McMaster University. He has a Ph.D. from Binghamton University-SUNY. He has served as a visiting instructor at East Stroudsburg University and assistant professor at California State University. His research and teaching interests include international relations, globalization and policy making, international organizations, comparative politics, American foreign policy and West European politics. The author of numerous scholarly papers, he is currently at work on a forthcoming article with Rhodes Profs. Karl Kaltenthaler and Steve Ceccoli titled "Explaining Public Support for Trade Globalization."

Lisa Kadlec, assistant professor of biology, received her B.A. in biology (magna cum laude, with departmental high honors) from Haverford College and Ph.D. in the cell and molecular biology program at Duke University Medical Center. A member of Phi Beta Kappa and an American Cancer Society postdoctoral fellow, she most recently served as a visiting research fellow in the Department of Molecular Biology at Princeton University where she has been a lecturer and an instructor in the Summer Research Program. She is currently researching targets of the epidermal growth factor receptor in the Drosophila ovary.

Steven Lloyd, instructor of psychology, holds his B.S. in psychology from the University of Georgia and M.S. in experimental psychology from The University of Memphis. His Ph.D. in anatomy and neurobiology is currently under review at the University of Tennessee, Memphis. He has served as a part-time instructor in Rhodes' Psychology Department, teaching courses in sensation and perception and physiological psychology. His most recent research involves examining the consequences of psychostimulant exposure on the developing and adult mouse brain with a special emphasis on neurodegenerative disorders.

David Mason, assistant professor of theater, received his B.A. in comparative literature (cum laude) from Brigham Young University, M.A. in South Asian Studies and Ph.D. in theater research from the University of Wisconsin, Madison. The recipient of a Fulbright-Hays Fellowship for Doctoral Dissertation Research Abroad, he has taught courses in theater at Georgia College & State University. The author of numerous articles and scholarly papers, he has directed several productions including original work. His current research interests include the nature of theatrical performance as a function of religious practice.

Michelle Mattson, associate professor and chair, modern languages and literatures, received her B.A. in German and Latin (summa cum laude) from the University of Minnesota and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in German studies from Stanford University. She has taught courses at Princeton, Columbia and Iowa State universities, and most recently served as associate department chair of the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures at Iowa State University. A member of Phi Beta Kappa and author of one book and numerous articles, she currently is working on a book-length project that examines, through post-war German literature, how people see their role in history and determine the spectrum of their personal responsibilities.

Charles McKinney will join the Department of History as assistant professor in the spring semester. McKinney received his B.A. from Morehouse College and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in history from Duke University. A recipient of a Mellon Foundation Dissertation Seminar Grant and Samuel DuBois Cook Award, he served as research associate, director of undergraduate studies and program coordinator for the African and African-American Studies Program at Duke University. His teaching interests include 18th-, 19th- and 20th-century African-American history, the civil rights movement, American social and political history, black church studies, U.S. social movements, the 20th-century U.S. South, oral history, the history of black activism and African-American legal history.

Katherine Panagakos, visiting assistant professor of Greek and Roman Studies, holds her B.S. in environmental policy, institutions and behaviors from Rutgers University, M.A. in classics from Tulane University and Ph.D. in Greek and Latin from The Ohio State University. Her areas of interest include Greco-Roman novels, late antiquity, Byzantium, Augustan poetry and material culture.

Timothy Powell, assistant professor of music, received his B.M. (cum laude) and M.M. in church music from Belmont University and D.M.A. in conducting from the University of South Carolina. Prior to joining the Rhodes faculty, he served as director of the Honors College Choir at the University of South Carolina, and, more recently, received a Fulbright Award to Bulgaria to study the music of composer Dobri Hristov.

Rob Robinson '97, assistant professor of political science, received his B.A. in political science (summa cum laude with honors) from Rhodes and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Wisconsin-Madison. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. Robinson's research interests include American political institutions, judicial politics, law and science, constitutional law, civil liberties, law and epistemology and law and political theory.

Rebecca Blume Rothman, curator of visual resources and instructor of art, received her B.A. from the University of Colorado and M.F.A. in photographic studies from Arizona State University. Her research topics have included marketing and self-promotion in the arts, historic photographic processes in the digital age and studio techniques. She has taught courses in photography and photographic history at the Memphis College of Art, Maricopa County Community Colleges, Arizona State University and the New School for the Arts in Scottsdale, AZ. She also has experience in gallery management and has exhibited her work in galleries throughout the United States and abroad.

Jon Russ, associate professor and chair, chemistry, holds his B.S. in chemistry from Corpus Christi State University and Ph.D. in chemistry from Texas A&M University. A former associate professor at Arkansas State University, he is the author of numerous scholarly articles. His research is focused primarily on chemical analyses of prehistoric rock paints, paleoclimate studies using biogeochemical rock coatings as climate proxies and method development for analyzing components in/from tobacco smoke.

Chris Seaton, assistant professor of mathematics and computer science, received his B.A. in mathematics (cum laude with honors) from Kalamazoo College and a Ph.D. from the University of Colorado at Boulder, where he served as an instructor. His research interests include differential geometry and K-theory of orbifolds.

Susan Uselmann, assistant professor of English, received her B.A. in English literature (with honors) from the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Wisconsin, Madison. She has served as a part-time assistant professor in the Rhodes English Department and specializes in teaching medieval literature, including Old and Middle English literature in relation to works from the continent, and women's literature. Her scholarly work includes a book in progress as well as forthcoming book reviews and an article on early scribal perceptions of women's literacy.

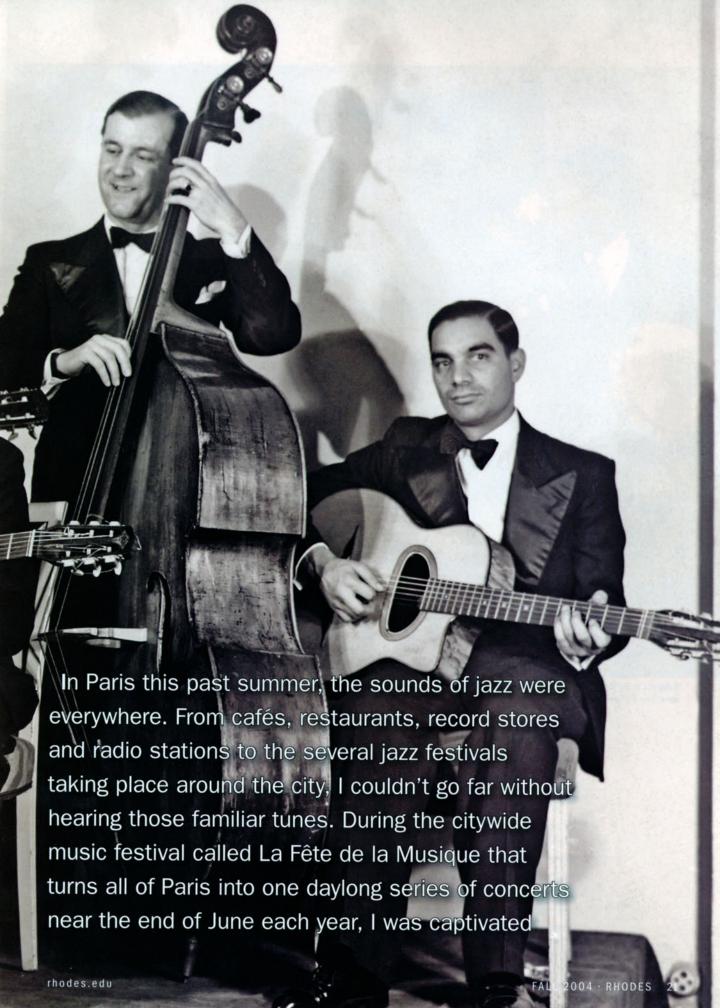

Elizabeth Webb, assistant professor, religious studies, holds her B.A. in religious studies from William Jewell College, M.T.S. from Duke University Divinity School (summa cum laude) and Ph.D. in theological studies from Emory University. Prior to joining the Rhodes faculty, she served as an instructor of religion at Augustana College. Her teaching interests include systematic and constructive Christian theology, theological responses to evil and suffering, feminist, womanist and liberation theologies, theology and literary theory, Christian theological ethics and history of Christian thought.

Making Jazz French

How Parisians Came To Appreciate the Sounds of America's Music

by a fabulous French jazzy rhythm-and-blues band playing on the Champs-Élysée. They had practiced the English words so well that they fooled me into thinking they were Americans until they started speaking to the audience in perfect French, and the crowd was generous with its applause. Parisians, it seems, just can't get enough of jazz.

But nearly a century ago, the audiences in Paris weren't always so friendly. When African-American musicians first carried jazz across the Atlantic during World War I, they were often met with more confusion than wonder. Bandleader James Reese Europe, for example, was a fixture in New York and had helped popularize black music in the U.S. When he toured France during the war to help boost the morale of the troops, French listeners did not know what to make of him. At one event, his orchestra played La Marseillaise, but no one in the audience even recognized it as the national anthem. Some French musicians thought that Europe's band was using new or special instruments to make their crazy sound.

The reaction to Europe's orchestra was not unique. After the war as jazz bands began to play in greater numbers, Parisian audiences became even more critical and frightened. One critic called jazz "a collection of melodic dust, a puzzle of minute imitation...of deafening timbres and pinching tones." Another thought jazz was nothing but "blasts of sardonic whistling." Still another feared that jazz might make listeners go insane.

These sounds so new to French ears were producing a kind of musical and aesthetic controversy in part because they symbolized something much deeper. To many, jazz was not only music. It was a herald of the modern era and life in the new century.

In particular, many thought it was the sound of the machine age. One, for example, called it "the music of mass-produced men." Machines often meant not just technology, but also America. Jazz, some argued, was the musical outcome of industrial development in the U.S. The critic Georges Duhamel, who wrote a stinging critique of American life called America the Menace: Scenes from the Life of the Future (1931), compared the sound of jazz to the mechanical world from which it came.

"The music suddenly burst forth from a corner," he wrote. "It was the falsest, the shrillest, the most explosive of jazz—that breathless uproar which for many years now has staggered to the same syncopation, that shrieks through its nose, weeps, grinds its teeth and caterwauls throughout the world."

And now it was taking over France, something of great concern to Duhamel and many others like him.

French audiences also took careful note of the fact that the people playing jazz were usually black, and the music would be associated with supposed racial characteristics for a long time to come. "Blackness" meant a variety of things to the French, but most often it evoked the jungles of Africa that France had been colonizing in the preceding decades. If the rise of jazz represented the ascent of black culture, many wondered, did that mean that those who listened to it might "go native" or become "uncivilized?" "If the 'folie noire' [black craze] is not stopped soon," proclaimed one frightened critic, "in a few months, I won't see any whites!"

Modern or primitive? American or African? Jazz was all of these things to French listeners depending on who gave their opinion. But whatever the answer, the end result was the same: Jazz was something foreign because it had not come from the French people themselves. And this produced the greatest conflict of all. In the years after World War I, France had to reconsider its place in the world as its role as a great power weakened. American influence was on the rise, something signaled by the growing number of American products on store shelves and U.S. motion pictures in the theaters. Uprisings in French colonies in the 1920s foretold of brutal wars that would bring an end to a worldwide network of economic and political influence. The thousands of immigrants who came to France just after World War I caused many to wonder if France would be washed away in a tide of foreigners who, they feared, subverted their culture and took their jobs. That was the very moment at which jazz arrived.

French musicians were also concerned with the foreignness of jazz. But unlike those who made aesthetic or cultural arguments, their worries were more bread-and-butter. For working musicians, getting a job could be hard enough in good times. Even though the entertainment industry in Paris was healthy, high taxes just after World War I meant that many clubs were struggling to make ends meet. And club owners preferred American (usually black) musicians who could put people in the seats. The law required a certain percentage of musicians on stage to be French, but to get around the regulation, some clubs hired a French band to sit idly by while the Americans actually played. And American jazzmen often received significantly higher wages than their French counterparts did. One early jazzman supposedly received 10 times the salary of a member of the government's cabinet.

By the 1930s with the onset of the Depression, French musicians again feared for their jobs. As the economy turned sour and American tourists went home, audiences dwindled. On more than one occasion, French performers protested inside and outside clubs where American jazz musicians were playing, and they pleaded with French listeners to boycott establishments that hired only Americans.

Jazz posed a problem to people in France: Should it stay or should it go? Was jazz just a flight of fancy—a fad with no real impact on the music scene—or had it changed French art and entertainment forever? Amidst the debate that erupted, an important group of musicians, critics and fans began to propose an answer: Jazz had not just come for a moment, but had come to Paris for good. And they worked diligently to make sure that those hopes would come true.

In the mid-1920s, two college students formed a fan club called Jazz-Club Universitaire to promote the music they loved. Soon, they made friends with another young man named Hugues Panassié, already an important player on the Parisian jazz scene. Panassié was not a professional musician but a prolific critic who had already written thousands of words in favor of jazz and was on his way to writing thousands more. He became the president of the Jazz-Club Universitaire and changed the name to Le Hot Club de France in honor of his favorite kind of music, "hot jazz."

In 1934, Panassié published his book Le Jazz hot, which outlined his aesthetic philosophy of the music.

"The very form of jazz," Panassié proclaimed, "is entirely different" from everything that had come before. As a result, he took it upon himself to educate French listeners about "hot music"—the New Orleans-style jazz played by black musicians like Louis Armstrong, Panassié's personal hero. "Where there is no swing," Panassié argued, "there can be no authentic jazz." In creating a category of "authenticity," he tried to separate what he believed was "real" jazz (played by black musicians) from the commercially successful, watered-down music performed by large (usually white) dance bands. Panassié was a musical purist, and wanted his jazz as hot as the musicians could play it.

Panassié was not alone. Although it was never enormous, the membership of Le Hot Club de France grew, thanks in part to the organization's magazine Jazz-Hot which published profiles of artists, record reviews, articles about jazz performances in the U.S. and Europe and advertisements by those in search of recordings that were hard to find in France. The members of the Hot Club gathered in homes throughout the country listening to records and sharing their appreciation for jazz.

Critics and fans also encouraged French musicians to play more jazz, too. There had been French jazz bands since the music arrived, but they were often looked down upon by listeners who thought they were not as good as the Americans. One of the first successful French bands, Grégor et ses Grégorians, touted its all-French personnel. The music stands on their stage were painted blue, white and red to create the effect of a French flag. As Grégor said, "We have freed ourselves from our dependence on the Americans." Likewise, another very popular musician, Ray Ventura, promoted himself as a French jazz musician by performing old French folk songs in a jazz style—including Frère Jacques and many other tunes with which everyone in the audience was familiar. His reception was overwhelmingly positive. "Finally a French jazz band under a Frenchman's direction," gushed one critic.

By the early 1930s, a generation of young French musicians began to make names for themselves: Stéphane Mougin, Alix Combelle, André Ekyan and others. They had grown up listening to Americans play jazz, and now they asserted that they were good enough to play on their own—and to expect the admiration of French audiences. Most famous of all were Stéphane Grappelli and Django Reinhardt, the cornerstones of the Quintet of the Hot Club of France, a group organized by Panassié and his fellow enthusiasts. They became the cutting edge of French jazz bands, both because of their international success in records, radio and personal appearances and because of what many thought was their "uniquely French" sound as an all-string band.

Audiences conveniently overlooked the fact that among France's jazz pioneers, most were immigrants: Grégor was Armenian, Reinhardt was a gypsy born in Belgium and Grappelli was the son of an Italian. Although their roots in France may not have been deep, they were deep enough for audiences to accept the music they played as a statement about France's openness to musical innovation. To many listeners, they proved jazz may have been created elsewhere but that it could become French.

And that openness may be the most important legacy that France's early jazz musicians left behind. When it emerged on the scene during World War I, jazz threatened many people's sense of themselves and their culture. It appeared to be a foreign music, both because it was African and American and because it sounded so shockingly different from anything audiences had heard before. But as they listened, people began to think differently: Their ability to appreciate jazz taught them that part of being French meant finding and loving the good things that other cultures have to offer. ## Learning and earning— It's All in a Day's Work

By Helen Watkins Norman Photography by Justin Fox Burks

Caleb Burke '06

hodes junior Caleb Burke is a man of varied talents. A would-be playwright and sometime actor, Burke can juggle basketballs, ride a unicycle with ease and build a stegosaurus out of a dozen latex balloons. But when it comes to landing a post-college job in his field, the ambitious theatre major knows that talent alone will not suffice.

Burke needs on-the-job experience. And he's getting it thanks to the Rhodes Student Associates Program (RSAP), an earn-as-you-learn student jobs initiative that raises the bar professionally and financially for on-campus employment.

Burke is one of 19 Rhodes students selected this fall to participate in the three-year pilot program. He works in the theater department, assisting the technical director in planning and constructing sets and hanging lights for main stage shows. "I like my job because it's very much about problem-solving and it's a lot of responsibility," says Burke.

According to its organizers, RSAP is unique among collegiate jobs programs in that it aims to provide intellectually challenging jobs that mesh with students' academic and career goals. Equally critical, it provides competitive wages starting at $10 an hour, helping make a Rhodes education affordable to more students.

Grants from the Mellon Foundation and the Lumina Foundation are helping fund the program. Mellon gave $200,000, with $122,000 going to Rhodes and $78,000 going to Texas' Southwestern University which Rhodes selected as a partner for the pilot program. The Lumina Foundation gave an additional $155,625 to launch the jobs program.

"The Lumina Foundation's interest in this study is to find out what Rhodes could do to create a reproducible program, something that could be done again elsewhere with results that would benefit higher education in general," says Bob Johnson, vice president for information services and a lead organizer of the RSAP initiative.

With the help of the foundations and Rhodes' existing employment budget, the college created a program offering jobs that pay well but don't require students to spend extra time and money to get to and from the workplace.

"We're lowering the cost of getting a job and at the same time making it more lucrative," says Johnson. "And we're trying to do it in such a way that the job supports their studies rather than competing with them."

Senior Caroline Downing, 21, landed a Student Associate position assisting with the work of two professors in her major—economics and business administration. She is doing research with Prof. Teresa Beckham Gramm on the sub-prime mortgage market (for people with low incomes or blemished credit). She's also working with Prof. Dee Birnbaum on studies examining the role of nurses and how their tasks are perceived.

"I can't imagine a better job. It's convenient. I don't have to battle with traffic or parking," Downing says. "The most interesting part is to work so closely with my professors."

While most of this year's Rhodes Associates work in fields related to their majors or intended career paths, not all of them are working directly with professors. Many have administrative positions.

Computer science major Bill Israel, 21, trains and oversees the student workers who keep the residential computer network humming. Senior Laura Blanton, 21, an aspiring journalist with a genetic predisposition to writing (her mother is a well-published mystery writer) is composing feature stories for Rhodes magazine. Meg Sizemore, 19, coordinates and promotes events for Career Services. She recently helped create the marketing plan for Grad School Awareness Week which included student mailbox stuffers of Ramen noodles and the note, "Let your first grad school meal be on us."

No matter what their campus jobs, no matter what their intended career goals, participants agree that RSAP is filling a void on campus.

With approximately 700 of Rhodes' 1600 students—nearly half the student body—working at the college in any given year, the issue of campus employment is front and center among students. It has been that way through the years, beginning in the 1930s soon after the college had moved to Memphis. During those grinding years of the Great Depression, now-Memphis attorney Lewis Donelson '38 and CLU Russell Perry '33 financed their education through a work-study arrangement. Donelson was a grader for Prof. Sam Monk, while Perry worked in college public relations directly under President Charles E. Diehl. Not only did it gave them the educational experience of a lifetime, it shaped their future and lifelong relationship with the college.

Their stories inspired President William Troutt to begin thinking about new approaches to student employment that would better benefit both the students and the college.

Today at Rhodes some students work in internships; others, as part of the college's large work-study program, which provides campus jobs—many of them clerical positions. Work-study offers its workers hourly wages of $5.15 to $5.90.

"Work-study is a perfect fit for some students, but not all. These (work-study positions) are legitimate jobs. Someone needs to file the folders and do the clerical work," says Dr. Jo Bennett, associate director of financial aid a coordinator of RSAP. "But sometimes (students) can't afford to work for $5.15 an hour. Sometimes a student wants more or different challenges from those offered by traditional work-study jobs."

Before creating the program, Bennett explains, organizers "talked to a lot of students about their perceptions of work opportunities at Rhodes, what it would take to make a meaningful job and what kind of pay it would take to make them want to stay on campus and work here for us."

The result is a program tailor-made for students like junior Laura Vargo, 23, an associate in the Counseling Center. She loves her job, surveying 65 college counseling centers across the country to compare the services they offer.

"I am excited," she says, "that the work I am doing might eventually aid the entire student body with new or more efficient programs."

Equally important, the job is keeping her at Rhodes. For financial reasons Vargo feared she would have to transfer to a less expensive state school to finish requirements for medical school. Thanks in large part to RSAP that won't happen.

"I can stay at Rhodes for another year and receive a more substantial academic preparation for the MCAT and medical school," she maintains.

"We know that if we can keep our students working on campus, it's going to enhance their college experience," says Bennett. "Students who work on campus as opposed to off campus make higher grades, they're more satisfied with the college experience and they're more connected to the institution."

They almost have their own "support system" in the department where they work, she says, a significant benefit for those a long way from home.

Students who work on campus are also more likely to stay at Rhodes. Bob Johnson believes the program will improve retention at the college and that will, in turn, save money for the institution. (It's cheaper to keep students than to recruit new ones.)

Student Associates can potentially earn $4,000-$6,000 a year depending on how many hours a week they work. The maximum weekly load is 15 hours, but participants may work fewer. Many, however, do work a full load and still manage to cram in the multitude of social and volunteer activities that typify the Rhodes student.

Sophomore Randi Johnson, a Student Associate in Rhodes' Student Leadership office, is helping develop and implement student leadership programs on campus.

"I can still fit in all my previous activities," says Johnson, who is involved in Air Force ROTC, her sorority Alpha Omicron Pi, the Russian Club and Model UN. "I just find that I sleep a little bit less now."

The push for a new and improved collegiate jobs program actually came from two corners of campus.

One, of course, was third floor Halliburton Tower, the office of Rhodes President Troutt. After chairing the National Commission on the Cost of Higher Education, Troutt has figured prominently in U.S. public debate over the cost of higher education and the impact on student access to it. In recent years he has challenged campus leaders to find innovative ways to improve education while controlling costs. Increasingly, administrators have studied student employment as a potential tether to rising personnel costs.

While the president and staff brainstormed about a campus jobs program, students were also thinking outside the work-study box. In January 2003 at a Dean's Council meeting of faculty, staff and students, J.R. Tarabocchia, a senior at the time, agreed to lead a Rhodes Student Government initiative to examine and improve the campus employment program. The idea "stemmed from my own experiences" as a worker in the Rhodes Music Academy, notes Tarabocchia, who is currently a law student in New Hampshire.

The student initiative had four goals, he explains: to "formalize and demystify the process of finding a job, to use students' work potential while developing their work experience," to help students earn enough to make up the gap between financial aid and rising tuition costs and finally, to create a centralized office for dealing with campus employment.

The Rhodes Student Associates Program does all four. It also expands eligibility: Any student can apply for a RSAP position, no matter whether he or she has financial need.

With its emphasis on career-track jobs in a broad range of fields, RSAP comes at a good time for liberal arts students faced with a tight job market, notes Career Services director Sandi George Tracy, who, along with financial aid's Jo Bennett, is coordinating the Student Associates Program.

With the launch of the program, academic and administrative departments on campus submitted proposals for RSAP positions in their departments. They had to make a case that the job would enhance the career potential of the student and would benefit the college in a substantial way. Once the RSAP coordinating committee approved the positions, departments recruited and formally interviewed student applicants.

"I've had some students say to me, 'wow, that was a tough interview'," says Bennett. "But the interview process is similar to the interview they're going to have for their first real job after graduation. That's a life skill that may not get taught in the classroom, but something they're going to need to know."

Laura Blanton '05

During the year, students will also receive special training as well as a formal evaluation by their department mentor. They also will have the opportunity to hold on to their jobs for the full time they are enrolled at the college. As the program grows larger and becomes fully established, it will seek first-year students and sophomores who can remain in the Associate jobs for several years.

"To make this program viable, it needs to be sustainable. We need to have students in their jobs long enough to learn to train other students to take their place and to manage students," explains Bob Johnson. "We could not afford to have staff who already had full-time job responsibilities to monitor all these new student workers."

With the new jobs program, students will provide a valuable service to the college, completing work that in many cases would not otherwise get done. Still, the real benefit to Rhodes, says Bennett, is its elevation as a "model institution in the area of student employment and student development."

"I can envision other institutions looking at Rhodes and what we've done," notes Bennett, "how we've taken a relatively small amount of money, developed this tremendous pool of talent and used it to benefit the college as well as the students."

Music to Our Ears

Rhodes alumni circulate Memphis music worldwide

ust east of the muddy Mississippi, Memphis' musically fertile atmosphere yields a matchless conglomeration of music—rap, r&b, folk, jazz, blues, country and rock. Locals can enjoy various types of live music with relative ease, stopping at a coffee shop or heading to Beale. But for those not fortunate enough to live in Memphis, the radio may be their only way to tap into such a constant flow of music. By combining their years of experience and passion for music, Selvidge and Archer have created an outlet for music lovers worldwide.

From acoustics to anthropology to albums

For Sid Selvidge, music has been a constant thread in his life, starting in his teenage years as a disc jockey in Greenville, MS.

"My voice was mature at that point, so they trained me," Selvidge recalls. "I'd work every afternoon after school and a regular shift in the summertime. Then I was shipped off to military school, and that was the end of that for a while."

Ward Archer '74 taping at Otherlands

The change of scenery did not stunt Selvidge's growth as a musician. Because he was not allowed to play his electric guitar in the dorms at school, he shifted gears to playing acoustic.

"I worked up an act, came to Memphis with it in the 1960s and started playing at coffee houses," he said. "And I have been pretty much doing that ever since."

Nurturing his love for radio while he was in bands, Selvidge worked with KWAM radio in Memphis during his time at Rhodes. He graduated in 1965, and went on to receive his master's degree in anthropology from Washington University. In 1969, he released his first album, Portrait, on the Staxsubsidiary label Enterprise. Then when he made his second album, The Cold of the Morning (1976), he found himself on another playing field.

"I was making a record for a fellow who was starting a new label," Selvidge said. "The record got pressed and the guy said he didn't want to be in the record business anymore. He handed me a couple thousand albums and I was in the record business."

And Peabody Records was born. He produced several records including Alex Chilton's Flies on Sherbert (1976). Meanwhile, he was a full-time assistant professor of anthropology at Rhodes from 1969-74. After working with Paul Craft and Cybill Shepherd, among many other musicians, Selvidge decided that six years in the independent record business was enough.

In between live performances, Selvidge was a part of the band Mud Boy and the Neutrons in the '70s and '80s, along with Jim Dickinson, Jimmy Crosthwait and Lee Baker. He has also played several times with his son Steve, including an appearance at Carnegie Hall for a series called Family Tradition. Selvidge's sixth solo CD, A Little Bit of Rain, came out on Archer Records in 2003.

In the past eight years, however, something else has been brewin'. With the partnership of another Rhodes alum, Selvidge has boomeranged back to radio to share his love of Memphis music with the world.

Coming full circle

As Selvidge was leaving Rhodes in 1974, Ward Archer was also on his way out. Graduating that year as an English major, Archer was in a band and had planned to go into the music business after graduation.

"I started a small studio, and that was where I should've stopped," Archer joked. "But then I built Cotton Row Recording with another Rhodes alum, Nikos Lyras '78. After 10 years or so, we were doing a lot of for-hire recording and that was kind of like chopping rock."

An avenue for his creativity opened up when his father, the late Ward Archer Sr. '39, who had started the ad agency now known as archer>malmo, wanted to leave the agency to start the Memphis Business Journal. Since Ward Jr. had worked at the agency as a copywriter, he didn't want to see the company disappear—so instead, he took it over. In two decades, archer>malmo became the largest ad agency in Tennessee and was recently named the second-best small company to work for in America by the Society of Human Resource Management.

"I didn't even own a suit when I took it over," Archer said. "I didn't dream that it would be as successful as it is."

After 25 years in the business, Archer decided once again to switch careers.

"It's the kind of business where you have to have young energetic people who can go out and fight the battle," he said. "When the same accounts start coming for the third time, then it's just time to step aside." Without further ado, he stepped right back into the recording business.

"I didn't really plan to start a record label," he confessed. "I just wanted to do something with music."

He rented a 1,000-square-foot studio and opened it up to artists. He began recording classical guitarist Lily Afshar, and when releasing her CD Possession in 2002, decided to go ahead and establish the Archer Records label.

"The hard part is trying to get exposure for artists," Archer said. "Even if you get your song played on the radio, getting it played enough times to make a difference is a real challenge."

Which is where Archer's expertise in advertising comes in handy. His invaluable experience in both the music and business worlds combine to make him a virtual one-stop-shop for emerging artists.

So far he has produced CDs for jazz singer Kelley Hurt, a classical guitarist, the modern R&B funk band The Gamble Brothers Band and folk-blues singer Sid Selvidge.

"There are as many markets as there are genres of music, and you have to get to know what the media outlets are," Archer said.

Now established as one of the five to 10 bona fide record labels in Memphis in releasing and marketing records, Archer Records looks to grow through cultivating the work of budding artists.

Alumni unite

Before Archer Records became a part of the Memphis music scene and before Archer recorded Selvidge's album on the label, the men crossed tracks in 1995 in a business deal that would ignite the explosion of Beale Street Caravan.

În 1995, Selvidge had been a performer on a NPR-syndicated radio program called Blues Stage. "That year, NPR made the decision not to distribute blues-related programs anymore," Selvidge noted. "I said, 'Well, let me see if I can get you some funding."

David Less '74, head of the Blues Foundation at the time, directed Selvidge to Archer, saying that he was interested in radio programs. Archer began negotiations with the Memphis-based Hyde Family Foundations. Several months and $100,000 of seed money later, Beale Street Caravan emerged, based out of Memphis.

In October 2001, Blues Stage and the Blues Foundation decided that the radio program would be better served as two separate organizations.

"It was a friendly split," reassured Selvidge. "We're still quite close with the Blues Foundation, the W.C. Handy Awards and the International Blues Challenge."

rhodes.edu FALL 2004 · RHODES 35

With Archer as president and Selvidge as executive producer, the noncommercial Beale Street Caravan has become the most widely-distributed blues radio program in the world, engaging about 2.5 million listeners every week.

Forty of the 52 programs every year are original. The organization plays reruns from July to September while members tour around the country recording new shows. They contract with various festivals to record artists who are performing.

"Mostly it's blues artists, but since we split off from the Blues Foundation, we now broadcast Memphis music and its derivative forms, which is just about everything," Selvidge said.

Branching out into other genres of music allows the program to avoid repeating the limited number of artists in the blues world.

"We wound up chasing our tails a lot," remarked Selvidge. "This way, we have a little bit more latitude."

Usually, members of the Beale Street Caravan staff spend several days at a time recording four or five acts at various festivals and venues around the country. By the end of the season, they return with an abundance of artists. A typical broadcast includes two programs within a single program, with commentary by a featured host between segments.

"It's strictly live music with some intellectual candy in between," Selvidge explained. "Someone like the late Sam Phillips or Cybill Shepherd may do a 10-part series. It's usually a person who knows the subject very well."

Pat Mitchell has assumed solo hosting duties for the program.

The crystal ball says...

As if starting three businesses and building up a fourth wasn't enough to satiate Archer's entrepreneurial thirst, he and Selvidge are now toying with the future of Beale Street Caravan.

"Right now we're exploring a format for television—how to structure it, how to convert the radio program to TV and how to distribute it," Selvidge said.

They intend the program to be modeled after Austin City Limits, a public television show that has presented intimate, live concerts with talented musicians from every genre for 30 years.

"We have a demo that's seven or eight minutes," Archer said. "We wanted to see if we could film a radio show and that's essentially what we've done. It doesn't look like the Academy Awards or anything—it's just about the music."

If BSC successfully moves to television, Archer and Selvidge aren't looking for a spot on the prime networks.

"Staying there for any amount of time is next to impossible," Archer stated.

Even the market for public television is tougher than that of radio. Aside from NPR, which plays mostly classical, and college stations, there are about 400 general public stations left in the U.S. BSC is already on 300 of them.

"On the other hand, in the universe of public television stations, you're going to have about 100 possibilities," Selvidge said.

As far as a location to film the artists, BSC may create its own venue to bring musicians to them.

"Then we can have a controlled environment and we're not in anyone's way, so they can do their business and still be in front of a live audience," Selvidge pointed out. "I'm not saying we won't still do festivals, but it's a lot more intrusive to film there than it is to record audio there."

Archer will be the spearhead in formatting and marketing BSC on television.

"I would like to be able to get it to the market with enough programming to say that we're going to be here a while," said Archer. "I'd like to think we could make some significant progress on it within the coming year."

Taking BSC to television doesn't mean the show's radio days are over. Rather, TV would provide another access point for its audience.

"What we have works and it's real and it's authentic," said Archer. "It works on radio and I don't see why it wouldn't work on TV."

As a city that attracts musicians like moths to a light, Memphis is perhaps the most appropriate place to broadcast a program like BSC.

"Memphis music is very cohesive," Selvidge commented. "It's more cohesive than a music capital like Nashville or New York, which are industry towns used to grinding out songs on a formulaic basis."

The power of a city

Both men contend that it's the unique culture of Memphis that gives the music its flare, the same culture that changed them upon their enrollment at Rhodes. For Archer, a series of college lectures called "Dilemma" was most influential in his understanding of politics and issues in Memphis.

36 FALL 2004 · RHODES rhodes.edu

Nationally-recognized speakers were brought in for the multi-day event. Because it took place around the time of the Vietnam War, the series invited speakers like Daniel Ellsberg of Pentagon Papers fame and poet Allen Ginsberg.

"In that day and age, bringing in Ellsberg would be like bringing in Michael Moore today," Archer said. "The freedom of expression and questioning the administration is not unlike it is today. That really had a profound effect on me."

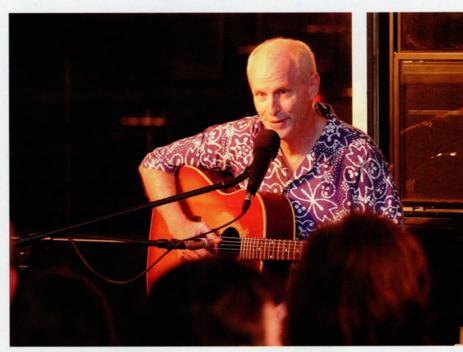

For Selvidge, Memphis' influence came through both his professors and the music. Emeritus professor of anthropology Dr. Jack Conrad mentored Selvidge and taught him about the trap of ethnocentrism, the belief in the superiority of one's own ethnic group.

"He taught me about the integrity and uniqueness of cultures and how the individuals in cultures were created," Selvidge remembered. "He really gave me a different perspective on the Memphis culture."

Selvidge's music has also been profoundly influenced by the Memphis sound. As a freshman, he sang Elizabethan folk songs and listened to records in the basement of Burrow Library. By his sophomore year, he was changed.

"I was out into the city running into musicians like Jim Dickinson, Lee Baker and Jimmy Crosthwait," he said.

Before he knew it, the folk music he performed in coffee shops morphed into a revival of the seminal Delta blues music. He began playing at the Bitter Lemon coffee house, opening for Delta blues musician Furry Lewis.

Sid Selvidge '65 performing at Otherlands

"I adored the guy," Selvidge confessed. "He taught me and a lot of other people that you could have a career in the music and record business without having to be a huge star."

Fifty years ago when Elvis christened Memphians' ears with his rock 'n' roll song That's All Right, he became an unrealistic icon of what life in the music business was like. Selvidge reveals the duality of musicians today. Sure, there are a few get-rich-quick types who don't last in the business. Survival, however, warrants consistency and patience.

"The other types are married, buy their own houses and show up for work on time," Selvidge said. "Especially in Memphis, there is a reputation that musicians are unreliable and lazy. It's quite the contrary."

Sharing the goods

"There is a Memphis sound and there remains a Memphis sound," said Selvidge. "I can listen to my son play with Luther Dickinson, Jim Dickinson's son, and I can hear in them Furry Lewis and all the people that I heard when I came to town."

That sound is what Archer and Selvidge share with listeners every week and hope to impart to viewers as well. They help Memphis music reach radio waves worldwide. Welding their knowledge from the business, scholastic and music worlds, these men are doing their part to proliferate an appreciation of quality music—and Memphis, for that matter.

Events that dominated U.S. news coverage for several decades don't get much ink these days. Are civil rights issues still relevant? Rhodes Professor Russ Wigginton '88, who teaches a course about the American civil rights movement, is concerned about his students' answers to that question.

Memorial to slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers near Jackson, MS

his generation sees the struggles of 40-50 years ago as being the resolution of those issues rather than merely bringing to the attention of the country all of the disparities that exist," he said. "They think we fixed it. I think we just began to define the problems. We're still in 'fixit' mode."

Wigginton joined forces with Dr. Leslie McLemore, professor of political science at Jackson State University in Mississippi, to try to do some "fixing." McLemore is also director of the Fannie Lou Hamer Institute on Citizenship and Democracy, named for the famed civil rights activist and cofounder of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party of the 1960s. The two requested funding from the National Endowment for the Humanities to inspire elementary, middle, junior and high school teachers from around the country to teach the civil rights movement in compelling ways. They received the funding, and the program, titled "From Freedom Summer to the Memphis Sanitation Workers Strike," got under way in summer 2004.

The program is the first collaboration between Rhodes and the Hamer Institute and a continuation of the growing partnership between the college and the National Civil Rights Museum in Memphis. Focusing on the 1964 "Freedom Summer" voter registration drive in Mississippi and the 1968 sanitation workers' strike in Memphis that led to the death of Dr. Martin Luther King, it attracted teachers from all over the country to study in Jackson and Memphis, tour landmark sites, meet veterans of the movement and hear their firsthand recollections. For example:

Wazir Peacock, an organizer for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), stood in front of the home of the late Medgar Evers and gave a moving account of the assassinated NAACP field secretary's courage and service to the movement.

"There was absolutely nowhere, no matter what time of day or night, that he wouldn't go to offer encouragement and support," Peacock said. "I saw him stand in front of the Leflore County courthouse in Greenwood without moving for an entire day to give people the courage to walk past a big crowd of white people to get inside and register to vote."

The Rev. Billy Kyles of Memphis recounted his memories of Dr. Martin Luther King's final hour of life.

"We were three ministers shut up in a room together, talking about preacher things," he said.

rhodes.edu FALL 2004 · RHODES 39

"Martin was in a lighthearted mood. He and Andy Young actually had a pillow fight." Then, "There simply are no words to describe how I felt when he was killed."

Rims Barber, a Presbyterian minister from Iowa who came to Mississippi for Freedom Summer and stayed, told a harrowing tale of lying on the floor with a terrified family while a cross burned in their yard.

"I couldn't ask them to do anything I wouldn't do myself." Then he added, "We didn't know we were going to win. They had all the guns and all the laws."

Woven through the stories of grief and hardship was a love of people and place remarkable to program participants from outside the South. For example, Dr. L.C. Dorsey, associate director of the Delta Research and Cultural Institute at Mississippi Valley State University, spoke fondly of her childhood even though she grew up in poverty.

"There was a closeness in the community that I've never experienced since. There was no welfare or food stamps because food was shared. People planted and canned extra for the needy or those who just couldn't get it together. When someone lost their housing, they moved in with someone else. I never saw a homeless person until I got to Washington. We never knew how poor we were because we had gardens and there were always fish and rabbits to eat."

Dr. Beverly Bond, director of African and African-American Studies and associate professor of history at the University of Memphis, grew up in a middle class family in Memphis. Although she spoke with passion about the humiliations of segregation, she added, "I don't remember my childhood with horror because I grew up in a very strong, rich community. That is something I will always have."

And among the sadness and regret, the faculty and speakers found much progress to celebrate:

- Dr. McLemore noted that Mississippi currently has more African-American elected officials than any other state.
- Dr. Vasco Smith, a Memphis activist, pointed out that the Memphis and Shelby County mayors and a significant portion of the members of the Memphis City School Board and City Council and the Shelby County Commission are African-American.
- During the first week of the program, the surviving members of the 1964 Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party delegation were honored guests of the Democratic National Convention in Boston. McLemore, who was vice chair of the original delegation, stayed in Jackson to co-lead the program.
- · Professors Wigginton and Bond both cited the progress and accomplishments achieved by organizations such as the Metropolitan Inter-Faith Association which was founded in Memphis after the assassination of Dr. King. "I'm very proud of the growth and changes here," Bond said.

• The Rev. Kyles noted that the general manager of a company that once insisted on his arrest for sitting in front of a city bus is now the board chair of his church. "I grew up in Chicago and made a conscious decision to come back to the South," he said. "I wanted to be part of the movement because I knew that once we got the segregation thing settled, the South would be the garden spot of the nation. I feel blessed to still be around to see integration."

Another highlight for the visiting historians was their growing understanding of the politics of the movement. They learned facts and figures about the various organizations involved and the strategies adopted by each.

"They all had some common bonds, but very different methods," Wigginton noted.

Prof. John Dittmer of DePauw University pointed out that SNCC chose to concentrate on voter registration rather than direct action such as sit-ins to integrate public facilities.

"Many people thought it odd that the organization that became one of the most militant ones chose votes rather than hamburgers. They chose the strategic way."

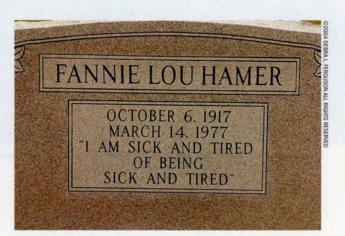

He added that the existence of the Council of Federated Organizations, an umbrella group that fostered communications among various factions of the movement in Mississippi, "minimized the competition that was so rampant in Alabama."

Peacock and fellow SNCC organizer Hollis Watkins gave a peek behind the scenes as they discussed their initial opposition to Freedom Summer, noting that all the SNCC regional organizers were against it.

"We had been working so hard to get people who were terrified to stand up to their oppressors and we were making good progress," Watkins said. "Our concern was that all that ground would be lost if a bunch of white people came in to take over the hard work. That happened in many cases, but a lot of good came out of it, too."

The real-life stories were fascinating to the historians. Amy Kendall, who teaches in Seattle, was already preparing her lesson plan:

"I think we'll start with the Harlem Renaissance, then look at the South to see why people were leaving. We'll spend some time on protest forms and I want to bring alive for them some of the unsung heroes, martyrs and champions. We'll discuss the meaning of freedom. When we get to the organizations of the movement and their leadership, I will ask the students to put themselves inside each group and figure out what their position would have been in addressing the different issues and challenges of the movement. They will like that."

NPR correspondent Debbie Elliott interviews Charles McLaughlin, who served as Fannie Lou Hamer's campaign manager when she ran for Congress. McLaughlin led the group to the site of Fannie Lou Hamer's grave in Ruleville, MS.

Many visitors were astounded to learn that the South, where segregation was institutionalized, had no corner on discrimination.

"In most areas of the North, blacks could vote but they had the same Jim Crow customs and limited job opportunities," Dittmer noted. "It was a national surprise when Watts erupted after King's assassination," referring to the area of Los Angeles that went up in flames.

Naturally, there was a great deal of discussion about whether the struggle was worth the pain and whether the civil rights movement is over. The answer to the first question was an unequivocal "yes."

"The things that happened that first summer made it all worthwhile," said activist Barber. "People changed their point of view from 'life is something that happens to you,' to 'my life is something I can create."

The second question was harder.

"Issues of injustice are much more subtle and complicated today," said Wigginton. "The movement shined a light on all kinds of injustice and served as a catalyst for movements by other groups—women, gays, Native Americans. In a sense you could say that the movement died a natural death, but in another sense you can say that it has expanded to so many more areas. I have always thought Martin Luther King was the backbone of the movement because he understood that the issue is so much bigger than race."

Bigger than race and bigger than place, perhaps as large as the human struggle itself. The 100 teachers who visited Memphis and Mississippi last summer seemed to feel wiser for their experience and inspired to help their students grapple with questions of injustice and other issues that cause confusion and pain to seekers of all ages. Wigginton believes that the colossal effort that went into the program paid off royally.

"We learned a lot that we can do better next year," he muses. "As Hollis Watkins said, 'The room for improvement is the biggest room of all.' But one thing I learned from him and the other brave people we were privileged to spend time with is this—standing up for what you believe in is worth paying a heavy price."

McKinney's Work a 'Bonus' for Lynx Football

By Bill Sorrell

While working in the business and strategy support system of a Memphis bank, Joseph McKinney '05 learned how to crunch numbers.

Tracking financial information and entering it into a sales system, McKinney helped calculate incentives that led to employee bonuses.

McKinney, a senior business administration major with an international focus, worked as an intern at First Tennessee during the 2004 spring semester and as a full-time employee this past summer.

He provided bank managers with "any and all necessary tools to perform at the highest level," he said.

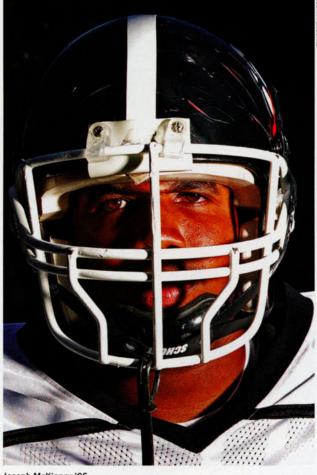

McKinney, an offensive guard on the Lynx football team, was not performing at the highest level when he was a freshman.

Numbers were crunching him. While running the 300-yard shuttle run for the first time in preseason camp, he couldn't finish.

"I came into camp out of shape. To say the least, I was overweight. The shuttle run was terrible. Guys were laughing at me. Coach E (offensive line coach Gordon Ellingsworth) stopped timing me," said McKinney. "I've come a long way since then."

McKinney is one of seven offensive starters returning from last year's 7-3 team, which finished third (4-2) in the Southern Collegiate Athletic Conference.

With three years' starting experience, McKinney has become a pillar of consistency and provided "a cornerstone of motivation for younger players," said Rhodes head football coach Joe White.

Joseph McKinney '05

"He can do the right thing in the heat of the battle," said White. "From the time of his arrival to now, Joe has made improvement in leaps and bounds. We're very proud of Joe McKinney."

Rhodes quarterback Daniel Swanstrom '05, has also watched McKinney's metamorphosis.

After watching McKinney fail the freshman conditioning test, Swanstrom thought, "This guy's not a hard worker." But he's turned into one. "He's done everything it takes," Swanstrom said. "His work ethic has improved every year, and it's been phenomenal this year."

McKinney (6-2, 285) has learned to play a "less-thanglorious" position, he said, because of his hard work and ability to push himself to the limits. He was an offensive tackle his first two seasons before being moved to guard his junior year.

Inspired by the potential White and Ellingsworth have seen in him, McKinney said, "I haven't always seen what they have seen in me."

McKinney is one of the team's strongest players, bench pressing 340 lbs. and squatting 510 lbs. He has focused on improving speed and quickness.

An Academic All-SCAC, McKinney has been playing football for 10 years. He played at Memphis Central and won the National Football Foundation Hall of Fame scholar-athlete award his senior year.

McKinney, who has worked for the AAA Memphis Redbirds baseball club for six years in children's entertainment and in security, looks to the football field for his just rewards.

"I get a reward when I know I'm working hard and that encourages someone else to work hard," he said. "I didn't get a (bank) bonus. My reward for performance is winning."

Going, Going, Gong

By Bill Sorrell

A friend of Stephanie Gong, with whom she played tennis in high school, made her laugh by telling her that she was "going, going, Gong."

If Gong's senior year is as productive as her last one, she may be "going, going, Gong" to the NCAA Division III tennis tournament again.

The No. 1 singles player on the Lynx women's tennis team, she advanced to the quarterfinals of the 2004 tournament hosted by Rhodes.

"It was the best performance I've had in a national tournament. I'll never forget it," she said.

Gong has been an individual qualifier in the national tournament since she was a first-year student.

Following her junior season, she was ranked seventh in the nation by the International Tennis Association, a steady climb from 28th her first year and 12th, in her second.

Gong was the 2004 Southern Collegiate Athletic Conference Player of the Year, the Rhodes Student Athletic Advisory Committee Female Scholar-Athlete of the Year in 2004 and an All-American in 2003 and 2004. She is the only All-American on the Rhodes team. She's been All-SCAC three years.

She quit swimming lessons at age 11 to focus on tennis, a sport she has been playing competitively since she was 14.

"There's nothing better than the thrill of competition. I love it. You are never out of a match. It's completely unlimited," she said.

Stephanie Gong '05

Gong's endurance and quickness have provided an edge that has worn down opponents. She plays a steady, solid baseline game with a feature on finesse more than power.

"My serve is the weakest part of my game," she said. "I win matches by knowing I can stand out there longer."

Hennessy Howell, a senior from Vicksburg, MS, who is co-captain along with Gong, said, "She can stay out there for days. She knows how to keep her stamina up."

Howell, who attended Vicksburg High School, played against Gong before the two became teammates. Gong played at Jackson (Mississippi) Prep, which won the overall state championship her first year there. Howell has watched her own game improve by observing Gong's patience.

Colleen Forsyth, a junior from Chattanooga and Gong's doubles partner, calls Gong "cool and collected. On the court, she's very athletic. She's inspiring."

Gong collected her victories—she was 20-5 last season—as a "grinder," said Rhodes tennis coach Sarah Hatgas.

"I've never had anybody with the footwork and anticipation of Stephanie. She is probably the consummate practice player. I've never had anybody practice and compete as hard as she does."

Gong has not let success go to her head, said Howell.

"She is one of the best players in Division III, but she doesn't carry the cockiness and big head like a lot of players do. She never tries to make anyone feel that she's better than they are."

Hatgas has encouraged players to "throw egos out." She has instilled a team concept, reminding players that each position, whether No. 1 or 6, counts one point.

Gong has a 3.66 grade point average in biology. She plays the piano, taught tennis at Jackson Country Club over the summer and volunteered at Blair Batson Children's Hospital of the University of Mississippi Medical Center.

When Stephanie introduces herself, she says that her last name is like "The Gong Show."

"It's a fun last name," she said.

From the Alumni Relations Office

Dear Alumnus/a,

In the 1986-87 academic year, I served as adviser of the Southeastern Interfraternity Conference. Five students along with four other Greek advisers formed the SEIFC board. Four of the five advisers used Macintosh computers. The fifth, Sparky Reardon from Ole Miss, was still using the long yellow legal pads and writing everything in longhand.

In one of our planning sessions, Mel Hokanson, the young Greek dean from South Carolina, raised a fine question which was essentially, "Since most of us are Mac users, I wonder if we can go to Apple and see if they could do something to connect our computers so that we could share file information or exchange messages...."

There was a period of silence as we thought about Mel's idea. The ice was finally broken when Sparky said, "Nah ... that'll never happen." With that, we dropped the idea and moved on to planning the leadership conference for the students.

Think for a moment about the extent to which we now rely upon using e-mail and Internet sites both to send and receive information.

In round numbers, Rhodes College has 13,000 living alumni. We have e-mail addresses for 6,000 alumni. Alumni who are registered for the online community number 2,700.

We are moving more purposefully toward electronic communication as a primary means of maintaining contact with alumni of the college. The monthly electronic newsletter is an example of this and has grown from reaching 3,500 alumni in its first release in June 2003 to reaching 6,000 now. "Inside Rhodes," a useful tool in keeping you advised of developments at the college, also serves as a means for us to articulate ways in which we need your help.

You may have noticed that the first three Homecoming promotional pieces this year did not include registration forms. Instead, they provided a Web site that could be reached for registering online with a phone number provided should a paper form be needed. We anticipate the day when invitations to events are extended electronically. In so doing we could save thousands of dollars each year on printing and postage, and those resources could be redirected to advance other objectives of the college.

We have an electronic community, open only to Rhodes alumni, that has a powerful capability to serve as a means of maintaining contact and providing networking opportunities. One may use the electronic directory to find classmates or search for alumni by city, region or profession. Users may post positions or résumés in the career services program. Alumni can post information and pictures about milestone events or simply extend greetings by using the class notes section.

We need to utilize the potential available through the online community to build a stronger network of Rhodes alumni. Join the online community by going to the "Alumni, Families & Friends" tab located on the Rhodes home page, clicking on "Lasting Lynx" or directly accessing the Web site, www.rhodes.edu/lastinglynx, and following the registration instructions. Should you hit a snag at step No. 3, contact Tracy Comer in the Alumni Relations Office (800-264-LYNX or 901-843-3845) to proceed. By registering, we will automatically receive your current e-mail address and you will begin receiving the monthly electronic newsletter.

We want to do a better job of both maintaining contact with our alumni and facilitating contact among those in our alumni ranks. Our ability to do this is dependent upon your response. Please act.

Okay, let's go full circle before we close. Want to know what happened to Mel, the woman who had the bright idea of sending e-mail messages back in 1986? She serves today as executive assistant to President Troutt at Rhodes College. She continues to come up with good ideas.

I don't know who invented the Internet. It may have been Al. It may have been Mel. It may have been the military. It may have been students working on a senior project at Cal Tech. What I do know is that it is here and with it comes great potential for us to maintain closer contact.

All best wishes from your Alumni Relations Staff,

Bud Richey, Director Stephanie Chockley '95, Assistant Director Tracy Comer, Administrative Assistant

Joe Neville Society Introduced

On the evening of Sept. 14, 2004, a reception held at the Bryan Campus Life Center honored Mr. Joe Neville and launched a new giving society at Rhodes that bears his name. Students, alumni and staff of the college gathered for the special occasion.

Mr. Neville, who was a member of the Rhodes staff for 44 years, was always regarded as a friend of the students, particularly minority students.

The Joe Neville Society is a giving society with the purpose of supporting African-American students in meeting financial need.

Further information about the Joe Neville Society is available through the Alumni Relations

Mary Allie Baldwin is pleased to announce the birth of her ninth grandchild, Robert Richard Baldwin (April 22, 2004), named for his grandfather. He will be called Richard. The proud parents are Robert '93 and Katherine McCaa Baldwin '93. Mary Allie now has a total of six grandsons and three granddaughters. In addition to her son Robert, she also has twin daughters, Allie and Amy '89. In July, Mary Allie went on a great float trip on the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon with her brother Bill McColgan '64 and his wife Judy Crowe McColgan '64. They were on the water for 40 miles and camped out one night on the floor of the Grand Canyon.

Sue Kirchen Betts, her husband Bob and the "best dog in the world" Piper, moved in August from suburban New Jersey to another suburb of Philadelphia near Chestnut Hill. They are now about four blocks from their daughter Lela, their son-in-law Rob and their new grandson Will Betts Cope. Will is their first grandchild. Anne P'Pool Crabb attended two sessions of the Montreat Conference on Worship and Music this summer. She also attended a fun family reunion in Charleston between the two sessions. Anne said the conferences at Montreat give a wonderful spiritual lift for the whole year. The worship services, which involve adults and children of all ages, are beautiful. There is normally a 400-voice choir, a 100-voice high school choir, 75 hand bells ringing together and nearly 1,000 people from all different denominations in the audience. I imagine getting back to playing the organ in her own church was a slight adjustment. In addition to her church activities, Anne has been writing a book in which she has transcribed real pioneer stories, actual letters and real interviews. We will keep our fingers crossed that she will be able to get it published.

Sam and Ginny Taylor Drash '66, are extremely grateful that their grandson Billy, born in September 2003, is in good health today. When he started having seizures shortly after he was born, he was put in the ICU at the hospital for three weeks. A brain scan indicated there was probably some brain damage because of a lack of oxygen at some time during the pregnancy. When a brain scan was done after six months, the test showed that everything was back to normal. Mike Drash '91 was named the chief winemaker for Luna Winery in Napa Valley within the past few months. He had worked at Far Niente Winery for five years before moving to Luna.

Jerry Duncan is excited to announce that his 37-year-old daughter Ashley and her husband Mark are now the proud parents of a daughter, Sara Ash Mahaffey. Jerry has two grandsons in Cozumel and one granddaughter in California. Martha also has two grandsons and one granddaughter. Jerry and Martha had a wonderful time with Allen and Marily Hughes in July on a trip to Quebec City and the Charlevoix region of the St. Lawrence. Marily celebrated her mother Sue's 98th birthday in Jackson, MS, in August.

Barbara Ensrud made a major presentation in July at the Faulkner Conference in Oxford, MS. The title of her presentation was "Mr. Faulkner's Taste for Wine." Barbara pointed out that many people think of Faulkner as an imbiber of bourbon, but in his later years he developed quite a connoisseur's palate for fine wine—and enjoyed some of the best in the world, from Burgundy to Bordeaux.

As mentioned in an earlier school publication, Harvey Jenkins has been enjoying his retirement since March. However, he soon realized that working is not all bad. Therefore, in August, Harvey began serving as one of two part-time interim pastors at the Christ Community Church in Orlando. Harvey preaches two Sundays a month, leads programs two or three times a month, and is available on call for pastoral services two weeks a month. His colleague is Dr. Clyde Fant, a Southern Baptist minister who is an adjunct professor at Stetson University. Their joint ministry is certainly a unique and a real ecumenical experience.

George McCormick is another excited grandparent. His fifth grandson, Colin Thomas McCormick, was born to Jennifer and George M. McCormick III in Houston July 19, 2004. George III (Trey) remains as a high official at Enron, charged with selling the assets of the failed company, including a recent sale of the pipeline for more than $2 billion. Colin joins big brother George M. McCormick IV (Mills), who is 19 months older, in their new house in Houston. Ben '91 and Christie McCormick have a son, Ian (7), and live in Shreveport, where Ben is an investment banker and Christie is a nurse who is training to be a forensic nurse. So far, George does not have any granddaughters.

Buddy Nix learned shortly after retiring this spring that doing housework and constantly cutting the yard is not necessarily what you plan for retirement. Therefore, he decided to take a six-month hike up the Appalachian Trail. In March, he started his hike, leaving from the Amicalola Falls State Park in Georgia. Twenty-two days and 170 miles later, Buddy realized that maybe a six-month walk might be a little too long. Thus, his wife, Janet McKenzie Nix '60 was nice enough to drive up and get him. After gaining back some of his strength, Buddy decided to try it again. Thus, in June, he left from Cades Cove in the Smokies, walking for another eight days and 100 miles. Buddy forgot it can get rather hot in June. Once again, his nice wife came and saved him. Buddy does not believe in giving up. Therefore, on Sept. 2, he began his third attempt, leaving from Hot Springs, NC. He planned to spend September and October on this venture.

Margaret White Petrey is having a wonderful time on a trip to the Grand Cayman Islands as we read this right now. She is visiting some friends who have a nice home there. It must be tough, but someone has to do it!

David Ramsey was the pianist for the Rhodes College Singers and MasterSingers Chorale as they performed with the Memphis Symphony Orchestra at the new Cannon Center for the Performing Arts. David was also the pianist with them in June at Carnegie Hall in New York. They were conducted by Tim Sharp and accompanied by the New England Symphonic Ensemble. David, composer Morten Lauridsen and the New England group were the only instrumentalists participating. Jerry Duncan said he heard them perform in Memphis in May and they were wonderful.

Jerry Davidson Thomas and her son Wilson Viar III '82 have collaborated on several chapters for professional books on juvenile sexual aggression. Their first collaboration was in 2001 on "Familial Influences, Family Treatment" in Handbook for Sexual Abuser Assessment and Treatment, (Safer Society Press, Brandon, VT). This fall, chapters from two different books will be published. They are "Family Reunification in Sibling Incest", (Calder MC, editor, 2004, Dorset, England, Russell House Publishing) and "A Programme for Working with the Parents of Sexually Abusive Juveniles", (Gary O'Reilly, et al , Eds), Handbook of Clinical Intervention with Juvenile Abusers, (Wiley Publishing, London, England). Jerry feels very fortunate working with her son. She says that Wilson supplies the intellectual help in their work and she supplies the concrete operational part of the work. Wilson's dad is Wilson Viar Jr. '60.

Gerry Knight White is pleased to announce that her son Thomas H. Patton III and Joy S. Dennis married June 11, 2004. They live in Fayetteville, NC, where Joy is in the Air Force and Tom is in the Army. Gerry is excited that her son found such a wonderful young lady to be his wife. Joy was deployed to the Middle East in October. She left for her second trip to the Middle East just a year after returning from her first one. We wish her good luck and safety.

Stewart and Susie Bracewell Whittle are both retired and live in Ellicott City, Maryland. For 35 years Stewart was with the National Security Agency at Fort Meade, MD, with assignments in both Europe and Asia. After retiring from the agency, he created his own computer consulting business which he sold two years ago, and retired for the second time. Susie has a degree in paralegal studies and worked as the legal assistant for a local attorney, specializing in estate administration. Their daughter Allison '97, received her master of science degree from the University of Tennessee and is now the director of summer programs for the Webb School of Knoxville. As such, Allison heads Webb's summer camp program, Camp Webb. In the fall, she coaches the upper school girls' field hockey team, the only girls' field hockey team in Tennessee. In the spring, she coaches the middle school track team. Camp Webb has been featured on Fox News Family and in articles in the Knoxville News Sentinel, including a personal highlights article about Allison.

Bob Sessum had a fabulous sixmonth sabbatical from Jan. 1 to July 1, 2004. Bob, who has been rector of the Good Shepherd Episcopal Church in Lexington, KY, for the past 10 years, and his wife Donna spent time in Italy (Rome, Assisi, Venice, Florence and the Tuscany Valley). In February, he attended a meeting of the Anglican Consultative Council in Canterbury, of which he is a member. They spent the rest of February in London, where they saw several plays. During some of March and all of May, he was in Cuernavaca, Mexico, trying to learn some Spanish and spent May in Siesta Key, FL, trying to recover from studying Spanish. While in Florida he visited Tommy McKay. And finally, in June they were in Greece following the footsteps of St. Paul. The trip was one of "relaxation, refreshment and recreation"-something he wishes all of us could experience in our lifetime! Now back in Lexington, Bob continues to work on the Anglican Consultative Council as an officer of the Anglican Communion and president of the IV Province (Episcopal) on the division and turmoil in the Episcopal Church. He is also in his third term as president of the Downtown Lexington Corp. And he continues to be the rector of an exciting and growing congregation.

Sam Highsmith, who lives in Little Rock, is checking back in with us after a 30-plus years absence. He writes that he gave up law in '79, sold the family business in '91 and got into development work (fund raising). He says it took him 21 years to find a job he loves. In April he started his new work as director of estate and asset services in the Planned Giving Business Unit of the American Cancer Society. He works with friends of the ACS who are interested in remembering the society in their estate planning. His territory covers the state of Arkansas, the northern third of Mississippi and those counties in Tennessee served by the Memphis and Jackson, TN, offices. Mucho travel! Sam has three kids: Cameron is a senior at Westminster College in Fulton, MO. Kathleen is a sophomore at Hendrix College in Conway, AR, and Sheena is a freshman at Arkansas Tech University in Russellville. Cameron is leaning toward law or teaching; Kathleen is still thinking of being an M.D., and Sheena has her mind currently set on pharmacy. Sam hopes that at least two of the three will be able to take care of him in his old age. His wife Beth is retired but very active in the church. For the past three years she has been serving as moderator for Presbyterian Women in the four-state Synod of the Sun of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). She also has been moderator of the long-range planning task force for the Presbytery of Arkansas and currently moderates the Presbytery building task force. Beth has three children and seven grandchildren to add to the pool. Their other "kids" are two standard French poodles, Tasha and her son Murray.

Jim Durham was recently promoted to the civilian Senior Executive Service (SES). That's the civilian equivalent of a general officer. He has received two significant awards from the Secretary of Defense (yes, he works in the Pentagon) for getting some advanced aircraft programs going-he is the "godfather" of the Joint Strike Fighter program and the Joint Unmanned Combat Aircraft program (J-UCAV). His daughter Lori, who graduated from George Washington with a master's degree in security policy, works in the Pentagon with her dad. In the midst of all this, Jim and wife Jane found time to take a fabulous cruise in the spring. Would you believe they have 11 grandchildren?

Mildred Bates is chair of the Bachelor of Social Work Program at Rhode Island College. She was on sabbatical during the 2003-2004 academic year doing clinical social work at a Family Service agency and research on the Interferon treatment experience of people co-infected with HIV and Hepatitis C. Mildred and her partner Cathy Cranston have a daughter Misty Cranston-Bates, who attends Hofstra University in Hempstead, Long Island. Mildred writes: "She's made us proud-she was valedictorian of her class and received multiple honors including academic-leadership and academicathletic scholarship awards from her high school. Wow."

Mildred and Cathy, partners for 21 years, married May 24 in Massachusetts. All the planning was last minute. They made wedding plans on Saturday, shopped for rings on Sunday, picked up the license on Monday morning and were married the same day at 1 p.m. They had a beautiful outdoor ceremony with an American Baptist minister officiating. Their daughter Misty read a moving tribute she had written for them and there was not a dry eye in the park. Congratulations to Mildred, Cathy and Missy.

Don Hollingsworth writes that he and spouse Leslie enjoyed a long vacation in the spring, including Easter on the Greek Island of Crete with three other Rhodes grads—Rick '73 and Susan Sims Smith '72 and Kathy Graves '73. He said the people were wonderful and the geography spectacular in Crete.

Lynn Smith lives in Sewickley, PA, a small town about 15 miles north of Pittsburgh, where she raised two sons. Her older son, who graduated from law school magna cum laude, is now with a large Pittsburgh law firm. He married his college sweetheart in September 2003. Lynn started her own language arts and study skills tutoring business in summer 2003. This last winter she, somewhat inadvertently, added a half-time job as a reading specialist at an inner-city school in Pittsburgh. She says when it rains, it pours. She enjoys the challenges and rewards of teaching dyslexic, ADHD, Asperger's syndrome (high-functioning autism) and just plain unschooled students from kindergarten through eighth grades. At last, she's been able to use her master's degrees in child development and professional and technical writing, along with her doctorate in elementary education with a minor in reading research! Lynn has been in contact with Phyllis Tickle, who taught English at Rhodes and the Memphis Academy of Art during our freshman year. Phyllis is living on a farm outside of Millington, TN, with her husband, who is a retired physician. She runs all over the country as a religion books editor of Publishers Weekly and is a popular speaker and writer. Lynn got back in touch with her after seeing her on TV on C-span one time when she was unaccountably flicking channels. She's still going great guns and sounds as vivacious as ever. Her husband has started a custom wood shop where he makes special doors and trim for fancy houses. Both seem to love their "retirement." Lynn writes that her sister Pam Smith Cornett '69 is married to a mountain-home building contractor and living in Granby, CO, just southwest of Rocky Mountain National Park. Pam works as a purchasing librarian for the county public library and is somewhat surprised to be following a career similar to her mother, who used to be circulation librarian at Burrow Library. She's the one who checked out all those "Man" reserve books to everyone.

Hizoner Jody Walker, who is a circuit court judge living in Ripley, TN, is an avid fan of Japanese maples. He and his wife enjoy gardening with them. They share this passion with Cliff Clifton and his wife, who come to visit and consult on various types from time to time. Recently Mike Whittaker and wife Sharon along with Jimmy Russsell and wife Linda went to Ripley for a visit with the Walkers at the same time as Susanne and George Elder '69. Jody did his best to sell them on maple cultivation but he wasn't sure what impact he had. They enjoyed each other's company nonetheless. Jody writes that if any class members are interested in Japanese maples and are in the area, they should contact him for a visit. He has about 130 different cultivars, with 87 planted in the yard and about 50 in pots.

His Excellency Jimmy Whittington is at it again. At 59, he is just now finding a hidden talent: acting. The churches in Selmer, TN, wanted to present an Easter pageant, which was a dramatization of Leonardo da Vinci's "The Last Supper." Jimmy was asked to play Peter, which required growing a full beard but having a bald head. Not much of a stretch for the good mayor. He had to do a 10-minute narration requiring a change of emotions 43 times while wielding a knife without cutting the other characters around him. Somehow, he managed to pull it off perfectly for three performances. Not a line was missed, an emotion forgotten nor anyone around him damaged by his unwieldy knife. His public loved him. His phone did not stop ringing for days and the post office had to hire extra carriers for all the adoring fan mail. The first night's performance brought in an audience of 500; the next night there was a capacity crowd of 1,000. On the final night, they had to turn people away. There is now talk about taking it on the road next year, and Jimmy has had to hire an agent. He says the one lasting thing from all this fame is the beard. Everybody in the county told him not to cut it, so we might not recognize him today. Sure!

Suntrust in Nashville is pleased to announce the promotion of Bob to senior vice president and Nashville region private banking line of business manager. Bob is responsible for all private banking activities in Nashville. He most recently served as vice president and relationship manager for the bank's government and institutional banking group. Bob is chairman of both the Young Leaders Council Board and the Bethany Christian Services Board. He also serves on The Nashville Group Board and the 20/20 Leadership Alliance Board. Way to go, Bob!

Peter Baumgarten lives in Atlanta with his two dogs. His recycling business, CollectiveGood Mobile Phone Recycling, is still growing and takes a lot of his time. He reports that he stays active: He goes contradancing-for the uninitiated, it's a folk dance similar to square dancing, and he plays in an Ultimate Frisbee league. He reports that there wasn't much interest in Ultimate when he was at Rhodes and hopes it has since caught on. He also leads music in his church, which is entertaining but can make it tough to get out of town. Nevertheless, he heads up to Asheville, NC, when he can to visit family and friends and enjoy the cool mountains. He has visited Bryant and Claire de Saussure Haynes on their farm outside Chattanooga, strummed guitars, mowed their hayfield and eaten their farm-fresh eggs for breakfast. He reports that "it may not be Paris in the spring, but it suits me."

Sounds great, Peter.

Virgil Starks is on the Rhodes Alumni Association Board. His position as associate athletic director and assistant to the provost at Auburn University keeps him involved with education and athletics. He and his wife Donna have three girls: Carolyn Mavis (10), Victoria Blair (9) and Anastasia Lea (6).

Robin Miller reports that when not working as an extra for the movie Walk The Line (the Johnny Cash story shooting in Memphis at the time of this writing), she is doing the typical "mom" thing. She is on the executive board of Germantown Elementary PTA, administrative assistant for Emmanuel United Methodist kindergarten, Sunday school teacher, chauffeur to two active boys, Cal, a fifth-grader and talented artist, actor, budding drummer/rock star and third-place winner in the State of Tennessee for his fourth-grade Citizenship Essay, and Hank, a kindergartener, who is discovering his many talents and that she believes is John Belushi reincarnated. If that is not enough, she runs a business out of her home called "Sweet Celebrations" creating custom cakes, cookies and candies. She also reports that she helps her wonderful, self-employed general contractor husband Stephen keep his accounting straightened out, which can be challenging since he often hands her his labor costs for the week on a piece of 2x4. Once a month she has a "girls' night out" with "The Supper Club" which includes Amy Doville, Tracy Vezina Patterson, Cathy Cothan Harris, Jennifer Frost Rena and Cathy Reese, all from the class of '84.

Montie Davis recently finished a project in Finland near the Arctic Circle where the sun never sets in the summertime. He reports that he didn't really sleep for a couple of months. He worked on automating a part of a steel mill there. He reports that it was a blast watching his robots dance their ballet! It seems that a couple of projects in China are in the pipeline. He also reports that he is a bit tired of traveling and misses his fiancée so he may make a change soon.

Tom Murphy and his wife Cindy live in Richmond, VA, with their children: Henry Hill IV (4), Meghan Rose (5) and Emily Quinn (8). He reports that he will probably be starting a fellowship in vascular and interventional radiology at UVA soon. All is well, he reports. Emily has started third grade, Meghan, kindergarten and Henry, prekindergarten. He included a beautiful photo of their children in soccer uniforms in his report to me.

Bill Krieger is a pilot for Federal Express and is on the team to bring whatever new aircraft they purchase in the near future on the property. "Very cool honor," he reports. Sounds like it to me, too, Bill. Kathy, his wife, is a business systems analyst for Baptist Hospital. Will (12) has begun seventh grade ("God, I'm old" Bill says) and David (5) has started pre-kindergarten. They live in Collierville now and Bill still plays organ occasionally for the Memphis Redbirds games and "warbles" in the choir at Calvary Episcopal Church. Says he's "lovin' life." Bill signs his note with a cocktail glass. Remember the good old days, Bill. Way to go!

Andy King and his wife Jennifer adopted Amelia Blair Yong Min King from Hunan Province, China, this summer. She is 16 months old and a true joy, Andy reports. The adoption process took more than a year, but the two-week trip to China was wonderful. The people were gracious and the sites were spectacular. Andy is the new director of counseling services at Southern Illinois University at Edwardville.

While at Morgan-Keegan, Neal
McAtee was recognized in the Wall Street Journal as the No. 1 stock picker among 40 oil service and pipeline analysts. He also was recognized by Forbes.com Top Equity Analysts 2004 for being second in stockpicking among energy equipment and services analysts.

Paiden Stewart Hite is currently a stay-at-home mom. She and her husband Dan have two children: Virginia (11) and George (7). Virginia has a great love for horses and other animals; she already sees herself in vet school. Fortunately, she excels in academics, so maybe one day she will accomplish that goal. George is a sports fanatic: anything involving strategy and a ball is up his alley. So far it's soccer and basketball, but football seems to be on the horizon as he was recently named Player of the Day in Montgomery Bell Academy football in Nashville. Dan is in the insurance industry and recently sold his agency to First Tennessee Bank based in Memphis. Last year Paiden took on the challenging job of restoring their Cape Cod home to its original splendor, with a few adjustments to modern-day life. Her background in art came in handy when researching for historical accuracy and decoration. Although painting and photography were her interests in college, she has found her creative calling in sewing-items for the home and clothing. She has a following of friends for whom she sews and hopes one day as her children grow older to have a fullfledged business. For now school activities and other volunteer interests keep her busy.

Ross Weisiger works as an advocate for the homeless in Washington, DC. He has spent the last four years immersed in homelessness as both client and provider at different times. He learned to survive on the streets and made many friends and family in the homeless community. Currently he provides home care for a friend's mother. His own mother passed away in May. He feels blessed in life with family, friends on the streets, and, of course, with his partner, Luther Lacy. He is godparent to 30 Polyphemes moth caterpillars who are busy chomping on oak leaves. "I am now out of debt and my credit is good," he says. "I intend to be fierce about living within my means. I am signing a lease on a three-bedroom apartment to rent with Luther and two friends. Adventures in homefulness! Could it be a phase?"

Wallace McMillan will help Jim Golden plan for our reunion next year-our 20th. He reports that it was a pretty small gathering for our 15th, so we should really work to get more folks to the next one! Following in the traditions of the "Old Man," Professor Emeritus Jack Taylor (physics), Wallace has been promoted to associate professor of physics, awarded tenure and is pursuing atmospheric infrared spectroscopy. After six years as assistant professor at the University of Maryland-Baltimore County, he says, "I guess I'm no longer the new kid on the block." Teaching and research are both going very well, with his first graduate student having completed his dissertation this summer. His group continues to be involved with a range of NASA and NOAA research projects involving remote sensing measurements of atmospheric pollution from the ground, air and space. After fieldwork in the U.S. this summer, he was off to New Zealand for a meeting in September. He hopes to deploy instruments in West Africa for a NASA field experiment next September. He says he enjoys more than 90 percent of his position and feels quite blessed in life with a loving wife, Rae, and a cat, Kismet. Rae, an attorney, works in the Office of the Secretary for Maryland's Department of Transportation. In their "ample" spare time, they enjoy refinishing their home in Elkridge, MD. His signature page includes all this atmospheric "physics stuff" I certainly don't understand involving retrieval and analysis of atmospheric trace gases from remotely sensed infrared spectra from ground, sea, air and space. I was in high school in Tupelo with Wallace as well as at Rhodes. What a smart guy!

Jim Golden is in charge of the 20th class reunion and reports that he is eager to get started on it. He and his wife Cathy live in Grafton, MA, a few miles west of Boston. Jim is vice president of Research for Life Science Insights, an analysis and consulting firm for pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies, as well as venture capital and hedge funds. They have two daughters, Charlotte Amelia (2) and Jane Belinda (1). While they enjoy living in New England, Jim is quite homesick for Tennessee and religiously reads Southern Living magazine.

John '84 and Jean Willard Asinger have been married for 13 years. She reports that they have two daughters: Emily (9) and Sarah (6). They love living in Charlotte, NC. John manages IBM's high and server sales teams for the Americas. Jean has her degree as a family nurse practitioner but is currently working as "mom." She reports that they visited the Grand Canyon, Zion and Bryce National Parks this summer. They are looking forward to John's 20th class reunion this fall.

John Guthrie and his wife Donna are doing well and staying busy with their church, their jobs, going to Pickwick and enjoying their sailboat. They had the opportunity to go to Ho Chi Minh City (old Saigon), Vietnam last January with his parents to visit a furniture manufacturer he represents, and had the extra time built in to go to Cambodia to see the ruins of Angkor Wat. He reports that it's a trip that they would do again tomorrow.

Michael Blair is now in Centennial, CO, just south of Denver, in the shadows of the Rocky Mountains. He has returned to consulting after a seven-year stint in civil service and is working for CWH Management Solutions. CWH is a small research oriented consulting firm, specializing in testing, performance appraisal and organizational analysis for fire, police and other public safety entities. His and Laura's girls are seven and 11 and growing up quickly. He invites everyone to give him a call the next time you're in Denver.

Ken Cannon headed to New Zealand this summer for a two-week trip of adventure sports. He says, "The Kiwis call this 'adrenaline therapy.' I'm sure I'll need a vacation to get over the vacation."

Beth Rickabaugh Setzer keeps busy with her own law office in Statesville, NC. "The largest part of my practice involves representing individuals who are disabled and having difficulty with Social Security claims or private insurance claims," she says. "I also represent injured workers and handle estate administration, family law and general civil matters. On the home front I have three children with husband Dennis. Daughter Sara Margaret is in the first grade. Twins Rachel Caroline and Andrew Davis turned three in August."

Beth Baxter is beginning her fifth year as medical director for a clinic for persons with serious mental illness in the East Nashville area. "I have worked in public mental health throughout my training, and I would not feel right if I was not doing some community psychiatry work," she says. "The truth is that I love it, and I hope I always have at least one foot in it. About a year and a half ago, I began a private practice that has grown to the point where I can support my own office-I was renting space from other clinicians during the first year. I am really enjoying this, too. It offers a good balance to my public mental health work. I am very active in my church, serving as an elder, and working with a ministry for mentally ill persons which has just won a national award.

Lana Burris is currently a psychologist and training director in the office of Psychological Counseling, Wellness and Testing at California State University, Chico. She reports that she received a FIDA scholarship to learn Spanish in Heredian, Costa Rica this summer. She has traveled to the Draker's Bay, Montezuma, Tamarindo and Tabacon Springs areas of Costa Rica. She was also able to see the Poas Volcano and the famed Arenal Volcano. She thinks of the country as "Hawaii and Tahiti without all the tourists. As they say in Costa Rica, 'pure vida!' which literally means 'pure life' and is used in a 'life is good' kind of way." Sounds very interesting and beautiful, Lana. I want to go now. Great news!

Allison McCarthy Gauthier reports that all is well in Providence, RI. She has lived in Providence for six years, and before that, lived in a small beach community in Rhode Island. She is now working for Bank of America (due to the bank's purchase of Fleet Bank) and continues a specialized lending job in the Portfolio Finance Group within the Commercial Real Estate Banking Group. She works a flexible schedule which makes juggling everything a bit easier. Her boys Ryan (9) and Sidan (6) are active with friends, school and sports. They both enjoy swimming, baseball, hockey and basketball. She coaches Little League baseball and youth hockey and really enjoys it. She reports that they spend a lot of time camping in Vermont and have fallen so in love with the Green Mountain State that they recently purchased a log house there. Their house in Providence is a continual project that they feel will never be finished, but she thinks that's how all old houses are. She looks forward to seeing everyone at our class reunion.

Kathleen Albritton Fittro is accepting a new teaching position at R. Dan Nolan Middle School in Bradenton, FL, teaching eighthgrade language arts and leading her eighth-grade team of teachers. The school will be the first of its kind in the county and one of the few middle schools in the state using laptops (every student will receive one) and wireless technology in the classroom. Textbooks will be accessed online along with the teacher lesson plans for the weeks. She says that "Florida is finally catching up with rest of the world!" Sounds to me that Florida is actually ahead of the rest of the world, Kathleen. I'm a teacher myself; way to go! Great news!

Jamey Sutton Kaplan has been a prosecuting attorney for 15 years in Memphis. She currently works at Juvenile Court prosecuting minors who commit crimes. Jamey has been married to her husband Todd for 14 years. They met in law school and he has a civil practice. They have two children: Joshua (12) and daughter Radall (9). Good to hear from you Jamey.

Hal Browder was an "extra" for the Johnny Cash film Walk the Line starring Joaquin Phoenix and Gennifer Goodwin (a native Memphian). He reports that he played an appliance deliveryman. He reports that it was an exciting experience since he got to wait in the shade. It was blistering Hades out there July 22. In real life, Hal is exclusively a bankruptcy attorney. Quite interesting, Hal! Thanks.

Matt and Lynda Hanlington Spinolo
'86 have been married for 16 happy years. They have three children: Luke (12), Joanna (10) and Julia (8). Their summer vacation included a trip to the Grand Tetons in Wyoming (would love to go there Matt; the mountains are God's country to me). They also went to Glacier National Park in Montana. Thanks for the great news! Their favorite family things are watching the children play soccer. Luke and Julia are in the recreational league and Joanna is competitive. Matt is president and CEO of Primacy Relocation, (offices in the U.S., U.K., Switzerland and Germany). His interests include his work, family and his church.

Jeff and Mary Lynn Tucker Davis '84 have been living in "Nashvegas", where they are very happy, for the past five years. They have two daughters: Elise Tucker (10) and Stephanie Cook (8). Ellie is named after Professor Emeritus Donald Tucker's (Spanish) family. Jeff reports that aside from keeping up with the girls, he loves going to Titans and periodic Vanderbilt football games. They are both active in First Presbyterian Church. He is a director of research for financial stocks for FTN Midwest Research, First Tennessee's institutional equity broker-dealer subsidiary. Mary Lynn has a full-time position with the girls and is also active in multiple local charities.

Catherine Cheah lives in Malaysia (WOW)! She reports that she works as a production manager as well as office/administrative manager and that keeps her "on her toes." She's been at Asphalt Industries Sdn. Bhd. for the past 18 years. The company manufactures and sells asphalt emulsions and cutbacks for the road construction industry. She also reports that she didn't work in August; rather, she was with a group called Hash House Hurricanes Hulu Longat which organized its 11th Anniversary Celebration Run. HHH is an worldwide organization of local chapters whose members run in all different kinds of terrains-somewhat like cross-country running, but, Catherine reports, in Malaysia they mostly run around the oil palu estates, rubber estates or through secondary forests. "The BIG achievement for us," she says, "was that even though my chapter has only 53 members, we managed to organize an event for 1,200 people from all over Malaysia. We had to chart a challenging enough trail to run, and at the same time take care of the beer, food and entertainment for the entire evening." A member of the organizing committee, Catherine reports that she's glad (and relieved) that it all went well and everyone had a great time. She doesn't know if there's a Hash chapter in Memphis, but knows definitely that there is one in Sacramento, CA. She was in Beijing, China, two years ago for the Hash organized by the Beijing Chapter. They had runs in various locations just outside of Beijing, like around the old Summer Palace and the Great Wall!

GYN physician in Nashville and has been married to her husband Ed, an orthopedic surgeon, for 13 years. They have two wonderful children: Hannah (10) and Mac (8), and two dogs and a gecko. She reports that "life is good." Dana and I saw her in her office recently, and when she walked in, she was the same old Susan: started to talk like we'd just talked last week. So very friendly and kind. We're so proud of you, Susan. Way to go!

Jimmy Kiser and his wife Alice live in Paducah, KY. He is a Tennessee CPA and was promoted to division president at U.S. Food Service there in Paducah in 2002. They have two sons: Eric (14) and Adam (10). He enjoys coaching baseball and basketball and is a Boy Scout leader.

Meg Waters Lambert just celebrated her 19th anniversary with IBM Corp. She now manages IBM's Web software sales business for Northern California and the Pacific Northwest. She lives in Granite Bay, CA, with husband Bart and their two boys, ages 10 and 7. She reports that she got away in August for an annual reunion with six buddies from our class at Brigid Elster Galloway's cabin in Middle Tennessee. Attendees were Brigid, Blair Gateway Norman, Kathleen Albritton Fittro, Sevgi Curtis, Margaret Bryan French, Kelley Ashbey Paul and Meg. She reports that she will send a photo of their fine selves.

In late May, Tammy Golden
Schmidt '86 gave her husband John
'86 a surprise 40th birthday party in Franklin, TN. They drove from their home in Indiana to what John thought was a business affair and had a grand old time. Several members of our class and surrounding classes were in attendance. Regretfully, Dana and I were unable to attend that particular weekend, but we heard great things about the reunion and birthday party.
Wish we could have been there, John.
Hope you received my card in the mail.

Excel Aquatics, a USA Swimming Silver Club Member with training squads in Brentwood, Gallatin and LaVergne, TN, has appointed John Barnes as the site coordinator of its Gallatin training location. As site coordinator, John is responsible for leading the other Gallatinbased coaches in the design and implementation of the training regimen at all skill levels, as well as overseeing the day-to-day team swimming issues at the location. In addition, he will be in charge of the Gold and Extreme Training Squads in Gallatin.

After three months travel to Thailand and the Caribbean to learn SCUBA and yoga, Josh Sandifer reports he has recently taken a new job with CIBA Vision, a Novartis Company, in Atlanta. He heads the new Organization and Leadership Development Group. The work takes him to Switzerland and Singapore frequently. Josh is also loving his role as uncle, spoiling his five nieces and one nephew (his namesake).

I'm trying to write this column in accordance from the abundance of learning I received from Prof. Bernice Werner White who taught Nancy Luter and me English first term in our first year at Rhodes. I don't know what grade she would give me on this, but she's in my thoughts as I write. What a great teacher. Hope some of you remember her.

That's it until the next issue, folks. Hope to hear from some more of you before then. Have a great autumn. Let's get "charged up" for our 20th reunion next year. I hope to see many of you there and I know we'll have a great time seeing each other again. Jim Golden is in charge as I mentioned before. Contact him or me and we'll get together and make plans for our best reunion yet. I wish each and every one of you peace and Godspeed in your lives until we see each other again. Send me an e-mail anytime; would love to hear from you for our class and for our beloved college.

David Dietrich was recently granted tenure and promoted to the rank of associate professor in psychology at Lambuth University. He was honored as the Educator of the Year at Lambuth in recognition of his teaching and service to the school. His wife Cheryl also teaches at Lambuth and has previously won the same award. Their five-year-old son Jacob is excited about starting kindergarten and playing soccer and T-ball.

Bill Lansden has moved back to Memphis to become the associate athletic director for development at University of Memphis. He formerly held that post at Middle Tennessee State University.

Lilla Magee and her partner of seven years Ilisa Kessler are happy to announce their marriage Feb. 15, 2004, in San Francisco. They currently reside in San Leandro, CA. Dear friend Catherine Winterburn was a witness.

REPORTER: BRIAN MOTT 3727 FAXON MEMPHIS, TN 38122 901-458-1338 BRIANMOTT@AOL.COM

OK, people. It's time for a little tough love out of me.

What's this with you all changing e-mail address more often than I change my drawers? Every quarter, I send out an e-mail asking for news for the magazine, and every quarter I'm DELUGED by "MAILER-DAEMON: Undeliverable" messages. What's up? Are you all fugitives from the law?

Probably not. But even if you are, send me a note from your new address so I can pester you four times a year for newsy tidbits. And there are many of you I've NEVER had an e-mail address for. Please take a second and drop me a line.

I got a decent response to this last email asking for news, but just to keep you on your toes, Lauren Wellford Deming writes in with this brilliant idea: Either you all write in with news, or we'll start Googling your names and see what we come up with. I've also considered just out-and-out fabricating news for some of you who have never written in. Don't think it can't happen.

My news first: I am completely smoke free! Why I ever started is beyond me, and you're all free to ridicule me for being so stupid and trashy. But now I've got that monkey off my back, and I couldn't be happier.

I got to visit with Knight Champion'86 when he was swinging through town recently, He looks fantastic and is enjoying life in DC. I also ran into the more-gorgeous-than-ever KirstenVandeBerg '86 after she saw me in the recent production of Quills. And of course, I saw Laura Richens on a recent trip to my hometown of New Orleans. Her kids are happy and brilliant, and she sends greetings to all her friends out there.

Now on to YOUR news, and babies always top the list!

Tim Chu and his wife had their second child and first son June 5, 2004. His name is Chandler Scott Chu, and his sister Cameron (3) is a devoted caretaker, kisser, hugger and tickler.

Harriet Smalley Monnig's husband wrote in with this good news: "Big news everyone! The Monnig twins arrived this morning, Tuesday, May 11, at 8:08 and 8:09. William Jennings was the first to arrive at 6 pounds 10 ounces and 19.75 inches long. Benjamin Marek was right behind him at 6 pounds 3 ounces and 20 inches long. Big brother Jack met his new baby brothers this afternoon and thought very highly of them. He is very anxious for Mommy and babies to return home. Mother and babies are doing extremely well. Your thoughts and prayers are most appreciated."

Proebsting: "Todd and I are doing great. We have a new baby girl. Margaret Ann "Maggie" was born Jan. 9, 2004. Maggie is the sweetest baby ever! We are so blessed. Big sister Grace has been such a big help!" Susan also adds: "I recently saw David Peterson. Todd and I have been toying with remodeling our home, and David very kindly offered to come by and take a look. Todd and I knew nothing about how to find/select an architect, and David gave us lots of good info. Seeing him reminded me of how many really good, kind, cool people we went to 10, 2003. So I'm a little late in sending the good news and the big congratulations!

And y'all have been a traveling bunch, too:

John Bailey writes: "Just wanted to let you know about our second annual reunion in Pascagoula. Randy Roth, Robbie Baker, Joe Welborn, Scott Decker and John Bailey got together June 11-12. We played golf on Friday and then went to Petit Bois Island on Saturday to eat crayfish, drink beer and relive the good old days. We brought in our wives—Tracy Young Roth, Melissa Hayes Baker '84 and Mary Margaret Kendall Bailey—plus the kids for dinner on Saturday. Rusty Bourne joined in by phone from Las Vegas.

And from Lorna Lyell Chain: "This summer we took the family (Alison, 6 and John, 4) to Disney World and on our way caught up with Alison Abernathy in Jacksonville. She showed us the town, the beach, St. Augustine and all the great places to eat. Our little Aunt Bee was a great hostess and she spoiled the kids with gifts and rides in her Miata.

Nancye DiPaolo may well win the "most interesting trip" award: "I took a wonderful two-week vacation in Eastern Europe and Russia. We hit the three Baltic countries (Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia), then took an overnight train to St. Petersburg. The Baltic people are truly embracing their freedom (it's barely been 10 years since Soviet occupation ended) and the artists are thriving. Medieval castles, fortresses and towns abound, left by crusaders and kings. St. Petersburg is beautiful, filled with amazing cathedrals and palaces, and of course, the Hermitage. White nights meant the sun barely set, so we stayed out for hours into the night." She also reports that she's spending all of August in Boston, opening a new office up here: "Taking advantage of this great city, I've got a loft on Beacon Hill, and plans to get together with Jennifer Thomas-Starck and her family who are back home after living in London for a few years."

And I likewise heard from Jennifer herself: "My family (Abigail, 6, Clementine, 3) has returned to the Boston area from our almost four-year stint in London, and I started a new job as director of international studies at Wellesley College in mid-August. I often see Karen Moser, who relocated from Boston to the DC area in September."

And from Jennifer Sandridge Whitener: "We've gone from one extreme to the other, having moved from the northern Rockies in Montana to the desert southwest in Arizona! At least our kids are getting to see different parts of the country.
We're still trying to adjust to the 115degree temperatures, but 4 percent humidity is pretty easy to get used to—and there's always winter to look forward to. No shoveling the driveway here!"

On the professional front, Nathan Tipton is at it again, as he always is: "I have been busy writing my dissertation. I am now officially ABD (which, contrary to what wags in academia say, does NOT mean "all but dead")! I am currently in the harried throes of much fevered writing, and not just my dissertation. I'm also presenting a paper at the MLA convention in Philadelphia right after Christmas and writing a short encyclopedia article for a professor friend of mine from Michigan. And Paul, bless his heart, has promised me that our long-overdue kitchen remodel will FINALLY be finished by December. Anyhoo, that's been my life this summer!"

Jane Amend writes in: "After 21 years away, I moved back to my home state of New Jersey in January. I am working for Toys R Us as a forecasting manager. I am responsible for nationwide forecasting of all of the core toy business, including Barbie dolls. Toys R Us is located in northern New Jersey, a mere 30 minutes from New York City. Living in New Jersey is a blast and being so close to the city is great. I am also working with the New Jersey Junior Chamber of Commerce traveling throughout the state training young adults to be better leaders."

And you can file these news items under the "domestic bliss" tab:

Karen Cagle York, her husband Steve and daughter Rachel recently moved into their "new" 1922 house after two months of long, hard (and expensive!) renovation. Who needs a Stairmaster and a treadmill when you can just run up and down stairs carrying boxes for five days? Rachel is very excited about starting second grade at her new school.

Attorney Carol Pierce Olson has been named a director of the Nashville office of Counsel on Call.
The company serves clients across the country, providing law firms and corporate clients top-level talent on an as-needed basis.

Mark Thomas was named the No. 1 company producer and overall top selling agent for Coleman Etter Fontaine Realtors in 2003.

And there was a confluence of Kappa Deltas when Susan Hook Patterson, Julie Owens Leggett and
Sarah Jones Wikle '88 got together with their kids at Sarah's house earlier this summer. Their kids range in age from 3 to 13 and had fun playing together in Sarah's pool.

Not a bad roundup of news! And please, if I don't have your e-mail address, drop me a line. I promise that I don't inundate you with junk.

Excelsior! Brian

REPORTER: C. KYLE RUSS CKYLERUSS@YAHOO.COM 202.360.0953

Like many of you, I feel like I should be at Rhodes, getting ready for classes. Alas, graduation has finally started to set in....In the effort to keep in touch and report the events in your lives, we have the class reports which you will receive quarterly if so desired. Please remember to keep me and the Alumni Office at Rhodes informed of your whereabouts and goings-on. Remember to include your contact information (e-mail and land address) as well as your major(s). This is my first stab at being your class reporter, so here goes nothin'....

Many of you 2004 Rhodents heeded the graduation advice to fare forward and see the world. To some of us, this was a literal challenge. Where to begin? Michael Lamb was a Tennessee delegate to the Democratic National Convention in June. Jessie Flanders left the States in late August for a SCUBA diving tour of the planet. She began her six-month trip in Australia where she met up with Daniel Head, who is on his Watson Fellowship. Jessie then moves to Fiii where she is most excited about the SCUBA possibilities and will live in a thatched roof hut. In Asia, she plans to spend time in Malaysia and Thailand. Jessie will then visit the ancient ruins in Egypt before rendezvousing with Elaine Odle in Italy. Elaine is spending the year in Italy learning the language and cuisine under the direction of her beloved Marco. Jessie culminates her tour in February where her mother and father already eagerly await her arrival back in Ft. Smith, AR.

Surprise, surprise, Emily Sotille is leaving the country again for another year. But before leaving, Emily helped a local midwife deliver her friend's baby. Mlle. Sotille has recently been accepted to the University of Edinburgh. While in Scotland, she will continue her art history studies. She also has plans to visit her townhouse roommate (T5 rocks!) Kathleen Caldwell who will also be in the United Kingdom. Kathleen is seeking her master's degree at the University in London.

Across the Channel, Sarah

Margaret Bridwell will be working for the French Embassy, teaching in Paris. Oddly enough, Sarah Margaret spent half her summer as a horse ranch hand in Witchita Falls, TX.
She also worked as an intern at the College of Charleston where she helped launch the school's new Law College.

Last on the international front, Kristy Kummerow leaves for Malawi with the Peace Corps. Always looking to serve, Kristy. Keep up the great work!

There were quite a few of you who decided to remain back in Memphis.

Logan Stevens and Dre de Araujo

Jorge took positions at Morgan

Keegan.

Becca Sweeney Metzger is happy to announce her marriage to David Metzger, her high school sweetheart. They married in Memphis at Temple Israel where several Rhodents were in attendance. Congratulations Becca.

Matt Hoffberg is also in Memphis developing his acting career. On that thespian note, Anders Reynolds and Kyle Hatley performed in Shakespeare's R&J. The play, which ran at Circuit Playhouse, was a coming-of-age story similar to Dead Poet's Society.

Dustin Diez decided to stay in Tennessee too. Dustin, who was the winner of the Louise and Ward Archer Sr. Award for Creativity, is pursuing a graduate degree in medical physics at Vanderbilt. Good luck!

Our class also had a desire to teach.

Robert Edgecomb, after visiting his girlfriend Sarah Tuttle '03 in the Philippines for a week, moved to Phoenix, where he teaches middle school social studies for Teach for America.

TFA is also happy and lucky to have Mia Hood as a teacher in New Orleans.

Elizabeth Townsend is also living in the Crescent City with Joanie McEnery. Elizabeth is teaching at SSA in Mandeville and Joanie is working with a real estate firm with her brother Park '03.

And then there was those of us who decided to move to the Capitol. Emily, Costarides, who got to DC early in June, was part of the prestigious Koch Fellowship program, where she interned during the day and attended lectures and symposia at nights. She recently got an apartment in Georgetown and plans to stay in the city for the next year.

Jon David Willingham changed plans last minute and moved to the District where he will spend the year at Steptoe & Johnson as an executive assistant. Additionally, Mike Roach gained employment at CAP Analysis, an economics consulting firm that does market research and forecasting for the government. And last but certainly not least, yours truly, C. Kyle Russ spent the summer traveling along Croatia's Dalmatian coast (beautiful!) and along the U.S.'s eastern seaboard. Ckyle recently accepted a position at Qorvis, a public relations and communications consulting firm in the District of Columbia.

Got left out of this article? Lemme know what you are up to! Please include your contact info (e-mail and land address). I hope to see many of you soon. Until then, be well, do good, and keep in touch!

Fare forward, ckyle

The Rhodes Heritage Society

Mr. J. Matthew Skvarla* '99

Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey A. Smith, Jr. '63

Terry E. Westbrook '66, President

The Rhodes Heritage Society recognizes individuals who have ensured the future strength of the college by making Rhodes a direct beneficiary of a variety of estate plans including will provisions, charitable gift annuities, charitable remainder trusts, and life insurance policies.

White Station High School

CAROLE BRANYAN IS A PLANNER

An honors English teacher at prestigious White Station High School in Memphis, Carole Branyan '67, naturally, is a planner.

She also plans for Rhodes. Carole recently made the college a beneficiary of her estate, which will establish the Branyan Family Scholarship Fund, with preference to be given to White Station High School graduates.

Be a planner like Carole.
