Policies for English 201

COURSE DESCRIPTION: In this class we will read, discuss, write, and revise literary short fiction. Literary fiction discloses truths about human experience in a moving and artful way. It strives for seamless mimesis while simultaneously making resourceful and aesthetically sound use of all the various aspects story telling, including language, point of view, plot, character, setting, metaphor, symbolism and tone. In short, you will endeavor to write literature. For the purposes of the class, you cannot write genre fiction—that is, fantasy, science fiction, mystery, children’s fiction, young adult fiction, and so on.

WRITING LOAD: Everyone will write and revise three (3) complete short stories over the course of this semester. Each story submitted for discussion should be “complete,” with a worked-out ending—even a bad one. (Fixing bad endings is one of the things workshop is for.) Each story submitted must exceed 6 pages, double-spaced, in length at time of submission. You are free to write about whatever you wish, so long as you fulfill, at semester’s end, the following requirements:

- One story must be in the first person
- One story must be in the third person
- One story must be told from the point of view of someone not your (i.e. the author’s) gender

You will gather together both the original as well as the revised versions of all three stories into a final portfolio, which you will submit to me at the end of the semester for final evaluation. This portfolio should consist of polished, well-crafted fiction. In assessing the merit of the completed portfolio, I will pay special attention to the revisions you have made to stories that originally appeared in workshop. The portfolio should run anywhere from 5000 to 7500 words (between 16-22 pages), but can certainly be longer.

You will also write four (4) exercises, which I will grade. The average grade of these four exercises will constitute your “exercise average.”

STORY SUBMISSIONS: During workshop weeks, we will workshop roughly five stories per class period. You will submit your stories electronically, and I will then compile all the stories into three packets of five to six stories each, and email them to you as an attachment. Each of you is then responsible for printing out that day’s packet. Moreover, you will write at least a half-page of single-spaced comments for each story up for discussion. You can either write these comments on the packet printout itself or type them out on your own: the former method is easier, the latter option is more conscientious. These comments—both those you compose and those you verbalize in class during workshop—will factor into my evaluation of your final fiction portfolio, so take this process seriously.

GRADING: Fiction Portfolio 60%
Exercise Average 40%

ABSENCES: You may miss two classes, excused or otherwise, totally free of charge. An F on a pop quiz will count as an absence, as will failure to bring your book and/or story packet to class. Absences after those initial two will cost your final course average two tenths of a point. I make no distinction between “excused” and “unexcused” absences. So if you can attend, you should. If you miss more than eight (8) classes, you will fail the course.

LATE PAPERS: Each assignment is due on the day stipulated on the syllabus. Any late assignment will be docked a tier reduction for each day that it is delayed. Any assignment turned in 5 class sessions after the original due date will receive a grade of F and can result in failure of the course itself. (See departmental policies at the end of the this syllabus.)

PROBLEMS? Anytime you have a problem with an assignment or class attendance, PLEASE get in touch with me. My office phone number and e-mail address are listed on the front of this syllabus.

PLAGIARISM: All work submitted for this class must not only be written specifically for this class but must also be your own work. You may not turn in stories you wrote elsewhere for other creative-writing classes. What’s more, the stories are, without caveat, subject to the requirements of the Honor System.
Description Exercise

1. First, write a one-to-two paragraph description of a rural landscape, a city street, a cluttered room, or a public space such as a train station or a doctor's office. Use only active verbs to describe inanimate as well as animate things. Avoid the pathetic fallacy.

2. Introduce into this setting a character who conveys any one of the following:
   - Complete emotional well-being
   - Fried brains
   - Emotional problems of some severity
   - A coyness that borders on the insipid
   - Profound authority
   - Astonishing arrogance
   - Total timidity
   - Amazing self-absorption

Of course, employ significant, concrete details and strong active verbs only.

NOTE: The one sure way to mess this one up is to employ linking or passive verbs. I will automatically lower your grade on this assignment on grade tier for every linking or passive verb I see. I mean business!

Due Friday, Jan. 19

Character Sketch Exercise

1. First, come up with three entirely disparate characters. These characters can be from anywhere on planet earth (rather than from some other planet) and from any class or part of the world you choose: they simply must all be alive at the same historical moment. For each character, fill out a Character Checklist, three copies of which are attached to the end of this syllabus. In other words, you will complete this checklist three times.

2. Write 2-3 page scene set in a public space in which you introduce, one-by-one, each of your three characters. For full credit, the scene MUST obey the following restrictions:
   - The setting must be a space that all three characters might plausibly share—i.e., a doctor's waiting room, an airport gate, a restaurant, a principal's office, a sports arena, a public street, etc.
   - The point of view must be objective third person. This means you will cast the scene from the perspective of some hovering "camera eye" which sees all that transpires within this setting but which has no access to any single character's mind.
   - Each character must enter the setting one after the other, preferably in discrete paragraphs.
   - After all three characters have entered the setting, they must all interact in some way.

The trick here is to present each of your three characters directly, imparting to your reader as much of the information from the checklist as you can without resorting to indirect (authorial) characterization or interiority. Each assignment will be evaluated according to how vividly and memorably it presents the three characters while still adhering to the restrictions listed above. NOTE: You will submit BOTH the three Character Checklists AND the 2-3 page scene.

DUE: Friday, February 17
Point of View Exercise

This one builds on your Character Sketch Exercise. There you introduced three characters into a public space and had them interact. Your perspective was that of an objective narrator. Here, you will rewrite the central scene in that episode three different times, each version from the perspective of one of the three characters. What's more, each version will represent a different point of view. For instance:

- One character's version will be cast in the first person
- One character's version will be cast in the second person
- One character's version will be cast in the third-person directed

The three versions should be consistent as regards events, so that each character should be wearing the same thing, and saying the same things, in all three versions. The key is to alter the perspective. Although you can condense or even shorten the overall episode so that the individual scenes are not necessarily as long as the original, you must still remain consistent in the overall presentation of events and so on. For a detailed description of the three types of point of view, see Chapter 7 of the Burroway book.

Due Friday, Feb. 23.

Dialogue Exercise

Select a conflict from the left-hand column below and write a two-to-three-page dialogue in which two characters disagree about which choice to make. At the same time, select an activity from the right-hand column below that will serve as the setting/frame for this dialogue. The characters should not only know each other well—brother/sister, husband/wife, boyfriend/girlfriend—but should also be easily distinguished from one another—fat/skinny, aggressive/passive, smug/sincere. What's more, the two characters should be evenly matched participants in the conflict at hand. Note: the activity you choose does not necessarily have to reflect the conflict; in fact, it can be at total odds with it!

All dialogue and activity must be presented directly. Punctuation counts.
