COURSE DESCRIPTION, PURPOSE, AND METHOD:

The purpose of this course is, first, to acquaint you with the scholarly study of the New Testament, specifically of the first three canonical gospels, also known as the "Synoptic" Gospels. Secondly, the course will introduce you to the means by which Jesus' sayings primarily and the events of his life secondarily became handed down in early Christian tradition to suit the needs of different Christian communities. In achieving this aim, you will also read two other gospels considered as part of the "synoptic" tradition about Jesus: the two sayings gospels known as "Q," a reconstructed source for Matthew's and Luke's gospels, and the Gospel of Thomas, re-discovered in the middle of the 20th century. Because no text ever arises without a context, you will become acquainted first with the concept of a "quest for the historical Jesus" and finally with the development of early Christianity and the formation of a biblical "canon".

The method of the course, in keeping with the liberal arts tradition of scholarship on religion, will be historical-critical. That is, we will concern ourselves chiefly with three areas in studying the Synoptic Gospels: 1) the historical milieu in which they arose and in which they were transmitted, became canonical, were lost, or suppressed; 2) careful reading, comparison and analysis of texts, insofar as is possible within the limits of their English translations; 3) interpretation (=criticism) of these texts within their contexts to discover their meaning and significance to various communities of faith. This interpretation will include the diversified portrait of Jesus that these various gospels were written to convey.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS:

1) Reading: Although many of the readings assigned appear short, they are often quite dense: therefore, this course is reading-intensive. All assigned readings are to be prepared prior to the day for which they are required. For each reading, you will be required to submit a 3X5 card on which you have written one brief thoughtful question or comment on the reading for the day. (For example: What surprised, intrigued, challenged or shocked me about the reading? What was difficult to understand?) These comments will be due at the time of the class for which the readings are assigned, and will serve as the basis for our discussions. You will not succeed in this course unless you do the readings, even if you think you are already familiar with most of them. If you know that you will be absent (e.g., for a sports event, field trip, etc.) you will need to submit your question or comment for the class missed. Please do not expect me to keep track of your submissions: that is your responsibility. Attendance and active class participation will account for 20% of your final grade. (An unreasonable number of absences will adversely affect your grade.)

2) Tests: There will be two in-class tests and a comprehensive final examination. The in-class tests are on dates shown on the syllabus. The final is scheduled for Sat., May 6, at 8:30 a.m. All tests are to be taken when scheduled. Each test and the exam are worth 20% of your final grade.

3) Scholarly essay: The final component of your grade is a scholarly essay, the result of your research into some topic related to the Synoptic Gospels and their place in early Christianity. Topics for the paper, as well as a complete description of the requirements, will be given out well in advance of the due date. The paper will constitute 20% of your final grade.
