U.S. Cities and Suburbs

Dr. Ben Jordan

Email: jordanb@rhodes.edu Office: Clough 317

Office Hour: Wednesday 1:00-2:00 and by appointment. I will often be in Wednesday morning.

Class: History 305-01 Meeting: Clough Hall 417 Wednesday 2:00-4:30

Class goals: Both urban and environmental historians have increasingly argued that the assumed dichotomy between people and nature is a misleading one and that people are an integral part of the broader non-human world. The environmental studies field has thus expanded to investigate communities in which people live, work, and play; while urban and suburban historians have focused more attention on environmental dynamics. This class will examine the broad range of urban and suburban environments which different groups of Americans have called home and the ways in which these locales have endured and changed from 1800 to the present. Our readings and class activities will balance the study of cultural ideas, social practices, and institutional structures. Students will set these developments within the context of broad forces of historical change such as industrialization, immigration, and globalization. We will examine how history has shaped human-built environment concepts and practices in current society and in our own lives. For example, we will take field trips to downtown Memphis and to its surrounding suburbs to see how national trends played out in our region. Students will build proficiencies in analyzing primary sources, evaluating historical interpretations, assessing changes in the urban and suburban historiography, recognizing multiple cultural perspectives, and expressing themselves effectively in oral and written work.

Class methods: This upper level course relies primarily on the seminar discussion method. We will read and discuss the equivalent of roughly half a book per week. Students should keep up with reading assignments and attend class faithfully so that we can have engaging and productive discussions. In class, we will also practice analyzing primary sources such as images, written documents, films, songs, and material culture in light of concepts from our readings. Each student is expected to contribute regularly to class discourse and activities.

Expectations and grading: Attendance, keeping up with readings, and active participation in all class discussions and activities are essential and will account for 20% of your semester grade. Successful class participation will also include submission of discussion questions and other assignments as well as events outside regular meetings that will be announced in class. My grading will stress effective essay writing, historical argumentation, and a grasp of the complex historiography.

Class Participation 20% (Involvement in Discussion & Activity, Attendance, Attentiveness)
Pop Quizzes 20% (Essay given sporadically; CAN'T make up unless excused)
