This course explores English literature after the restoration of Charles II to the throne in 1660. The course will be on plays by representative dramatists, including Wycherley, Etherege, Dryden, Southerne, and Congreve, and on the unique conditions of the theater they wrote for between 1660 and 1700. This survey includes other genres -- prose fiction, satiric poetry -- of the period; authors span the representative to the notorious.

Texts:

William Wycherley, The Country Wife (New Mermaids)
George Etherege, The Man of Mode (New Mermaids)
John Dryden, All for Love (Norton)
John Dryden, Amphitryon in Four Restoration Marriage Plays (World's Classics)
John Dryden, Selected Poetry and Prose of John Dryden (McGraw-Hill)
Thomas Southerne, The Wives' Excuse in Four Restoration Marriage Plays (World's Classics)
William Congreve, The Comedies of William Congreve (Penguin)
Daniel Defoe, Roxana (Oxford UP)
George Savile, Marquis of Halifax, "A Character of King Charles II" (handout)
John Wilmot, Earl of Rochester, Selected poems (handout)

Evaluation:

- 60% You are required to write essays of 1500 words each on the central units of this course
- 10% Participation in the class, attendance, preparation for class, and willingness to engage with the primary material and the scholarship in the field. Students who are absent for more than 5 classes will be asked to withdraw from the course; more than 3 absences -- or very tardy arrivals to class -- will significantly affect this component of your grade.
- 10% In-class question
- 10% In-class midterm on Rochester and Dryden's All for Love
- 10% In-class final on Southerne's The Wives' Excuse and Defoe's Roxana
